Prefatory Note

THE selection for the purposes of the Belles-Lettres Series of the play most strictly representative of Swinburne's dramatic work has been determined by the following considerations. The Queen Mother and Rosamond are out of the question because of their immaturity; Atalanta in Calydon and Erechtheus are put aside because of the fact that their proper classification is with the lyrical rather than with the dramatic group of his poems. There remain the Mary Stuart trilogy and the four later dramas. the trilogy is unquestionably Swinburne's dramatic masterwork, it must be represented, and (Bothwell being excluded by its great length) the choice must fall upon either Chastelard or Mary Stuart. The former of these plays is essentially a production of the poet's unchastened and exuberant youth, and consequently, despite the patent beauty of its poetic diction, must give place to the latter, which exemplifies the full ripeness of Swinburne's dramatic powers and the complete mastery of his poetical material. The fact, moreover, that the author has himself avowed the belief that he has never "written anything worthier" in its kind than Mary Stuart should confirm the justice of the selection. A further reason is incidentally provided by the fact that Schiller's treatment of the close of the career of the Queen of Scots is made the subject of much study in school and college, a fact which makes it interesting to compare his treatment with that of Swinburne.

The present text follows the so-called second edition of 1899, which is, however, an unaltered reprint of the original edition of 1881.

Biography

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE was born in London, April 5, 1837. He was the oldest child of Admiral Charles Henry Swinburne and Lady Jane Henrietta, daughter of the third Earl of Ashburnham. Both the Swinburne and the Ashburnham lineages are long and distinguished. The present head of the family is Sir John Edward Swinburne, sixth baronet, a first cousin of the poet. Algernon was educated at Eton and Balliol, but left Oxford without taking a degree. During his university years (1856–1860) he contributed to Undergraduate Papers, distinguished himself in French, Italian, and the classics, and began his life-long friendship with Morris, Rossetti, and Burne-Jones. His first book, The Queen Mother and Rosamond, was published in 1860, just after leaving the university. A visit to Italy the next year was made memorable by his meeting with Walter Savage Landor, Returning to England, he devoted himself to literary work, in 1865 won the applause of the judicious with his Atalanta in Calydon and Chastelard, and in 1866 took the public by storm with the famous first volume of Poems and Ballads. During the next twelve years he lived in London, and wrote industriously. The chief works of this period are William Blake: A Critical Essay (1868), Songs before Sun-rise (1871), Bothwell (1874), Essays and Studies (1875), Songs of Two Nations (1875), Erechtheus (1876), and the second series of Poems and Ballads (1878). During these years in London he became intimately associated with Theodore Watts (now Watts-Dunton), and in 1879 accepted the invitation of that distinguished man of letters to share his home at Putney Hill, a London suburb. Here the poet has lived ever since, except for a few holiday excursions, and here he has produced the long succession of books that have added almost yearly to his ever-broadening fame. The principal titles are: A Study of Shakespeare (1880), Songs of the Springtides (1880), Studies in Song (1880), Mary Stuart (1881), Tristram of Lyonesse (1882), A Century of Roundels (1883), A Midsummer Holiday (1884), Marino Faliero (1885), A Study of Victor Hugo (1886), Miscellanies (1886), Locrine (1887), a third series of Poems and Ballads (1889), The Sisters (1892), Astrophel (1894), Studies in Prose and Poetry (1894), The Tale of Balen (1896), Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards (1899), A Channel Passage (1904), and Love's Cross Currents (1905), a novel in epistolary form, published serially and pseudonymously in 1877, and written in the early sixties. The foregoing list omits several works of minor importance, and takes no account of a large amount of material still uncollected from the pages of the periodicals to which it was contributed. The poet has recently superintended a uniform reissue of his verse, the Poems, in six volumes, and the Tragedies, in five volumes. Of late years Swinburne has lived a somewhat secluded life, owing in large measure to the infirmity of deafness, but he retains his active interest in the historical happenings of the time.

Introduction

SWINBURNE is the author of eleven dramatic works, all tragedies, and all written in verse. The list comprises: first, the two juvenile pieces, The Queen Mother and Rosamond, included in his earliest volume; second, Atalanta in Calydon and Erechtheus, his two reproductions of the Greek form; third, the colossal chronicle-trilogy which deals with the tragic fortunes of the Oueen of Scots, and which consists of Chastelard, Bothwell, and Mary Stuart; and fourth, the tragedies of his later years, which are Marino Faliero, Locrine, The Sisters, and Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards. Of these eleven productions the two Greek studies, being essentially lyrical in spirit and accent, are grouped with the Poems in their author's classification of his works, while the remaining nine constitute the Tragedies in that classification, and occupy five of the eleven volumes which make up the new uniform edition of Swinburne's verse. It is an account of these nine tragedies that is now attempted.

In the Dedicatory Epistle of 1904, inscribing the new edition of his works to Theodore Watts-Dunton,

I Since this essay is given up exclusively to the study of Swinburne's dramatic verse, its readers may be referred, for a more comprehensive view of his work, and for those considerations which compel us to regard him as the greatest poet now living, to the present editor's Introduction to Selected Poems by Algernon Charles Swinburne, published in the section of the Belles-Lettres Series devoted to Nineteenth Century Poets.

his "best and dearest friend," Swinburne thus speaks of his first venture in dramatic composition: "My first if not my strongest ambition was to do something worth doing, and not utterly unworthy of a young countryman of Marlowe the teacher and Webster the pupil of Shakespeare, in a line of work which those three poets had left as a possibly unattainable example for ambitious Englishmen. And my first book, written while yet under academic or tutorial authority, bore evidence of that ambition in every line. I should be the last to deny that it also bore evidence of the fact that its writer had no more notion of dramatic or theatrical construction than the authors of Tamburlaine the Great, King Henry VI, and Sir Thomas Wyatt." This self-criticism seems a trifle severe as applied to The Queen Mother, which play, whatever its faults of mannerism, of obscurity or super-subtlety, of turgid diction, and of over-emphasis of its sensuous elements, is at least structurally coherent and dramatically effective in the Elizabethan manner. It preserves the unities of time and place, the scene being laid in Paris during the three days that culminated with the night of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and many an Elizabethan play has less unity of action. Rosamond, which is also included in this first volume, is a much slighter affair. It is a dramatic sketch in five scenes, alternating between the king's palace at Shene and the bower at Woodstock, and dealing with the secret love of Henry II and the vengeance taken by his jealous queen. An interesting comparison might be made between this work and Tennyson's Becket, in which the same theme receives episodic treatment.

Swinburne's chief dramatic work is the great trilogy which occupied his attention for a score of years, and which has for its central figure the ill-starred Queen of Scots. Here was a subject magnificently fitted for tragic uses, and appealing with peculiar force to a poet whose own ancestors had fought and bled in the Stuart cause. And so the woman whose figure had been the "red star of boyhood's fiery thought" occupied the best years of the poet's manhood with an endeavor to set forth her varied fortunes in a drama of colossal plan, and to embody in the characterization something of the "love and wonder" with which her memory had inspired the "April age" of his youth. Chaste-lard, the first section of the trilogy, was published in 1865, but its writing dates, at least in part, from an earlier period. In his Adieux à Marie Stuart, written after the completion of the trilogy in 1881, Swinburne speaks of "the song . . . that took your praise up twenty years ago," and in the Dedicatory Epistle already mentioned he calls Chastelard a play "conceived and partly written by a youngster not yet emancipated from servitude to college rule." He further says, after disclaiming any ascription to his earlier volume of "power to grapple with the realities and subtleties of character and of motive," that in Chastelard "there are two figures and a sketch in which I certainly seem to see something of real and evident life."

The figures here referred to are, it is hardly necessary to state, those of the Queen and of the poet-lover who has come with her from France to Scotland, while the sketch is that of Darnley. In the play, the Queen weds Darnley as an immediate consequence of her imagined discovery of Chastelard's unfaithfulness. whereas the historical fact is that the marriage did not take place until more than two years after the execution of Chastelard. The four women who are the personal attendants of Mary Stuart, and who are known in Scotch romance and minstrelsy as "the Queen's Maries," figure prominently in Chastelard, and the motive of the tragedy is provided by the Queen's belief that her lover has played her false with one of them. In a sense, the motive of the entire trilogy is thus provided, for this woman, Mary Beaton, loves Chastelard, although her affection is unrequited. And when, twenty-five years after his death, her mistress expiates upon the scaffold at Fotheringay the accumulated errors and crimes of a lifetime, the direct agency in bringing about the tragic consummation is this same Mary Beaton, who has for all these years in silent persistency guarded her secret and cherished her vengeful purpose. Chastelard meets his fate as a "verray parfit gentil knight," breathing no word of reproach upon the Queen's fame, and taking upon himself the entire burden of their common guilt. The closing scenes are dark with foreshadowings of what is to come in after years. Says the Queen, alone with her doomed lover for the last time:

"I am quite sure
I shall die sadly some day, Chastelard,
I am quite certain." Act v, Scene 2.

And Chastelard:

"Men must love you in life's spite; For you will always kill them, man by man Your lips will bite them dead; yea, though you would, You shall not spare them; all will die of you."

Act v, Scene 2.

And Mary Beaton, pleading for Chastelard's life:

"If you do slay him you are but shamed to death:
All men will cry upon you, women weep,
Turning your sweet name bitter with their tears;
Red shame grow up out of your memory
And burn his face that would speak well of you;
You shall have no good word nor pity, none,
Till some such end be fallen upon you."

Act IV, Scene I.

And the prayer of Mary Beaton, when the headsman has done his work, and the cry, "So perish the Queen's traitors!" goes up from the multitude, is this:

"Yea, but so
Perish the Queen! God do thus much to her
For his sake only: yea, for pity's sake
Do this much with her." Act v, Scene 3.

Thus the tragedy closes, heavy with the sense that somewhere in the dim future it will be complemented by another and more resounding tragedy, and the ends of a retributive justice be accomplished. It is evident that the entire trilogy was outlined in some shape in the poet's consciousness before the completion of this introductory section.

Bothwell, the second section of the trilogy, did not appear until 1874, which means that nearly ten of Swinburne's most virile years went to its composition.

It covers a period of a little more than two years, from March 9, 1566, to May 16, 1568, — that is, from the assassination of Rizzio to the escape of the Queen into England after the battle of Langside. The five acts are respectively entitled David Rizzio, Bothwell, Jane Gordon, John Knox, and The Queen. The first act deals with the conspiracy for the removal of the Queen's Italian favorite, and ends with his being dragged from her helpless presence to death at the hands of Darnley and his fellow assassins. In the second act, Bothwell, whose advent into the Queen's life had been ominously heralded at the very close of Chastelard, and whose ambitious passion for Mary was already kindled, although he had but recently been wedded to Jane Gordon, becomes the central figure. Nearly a year is covered by this act, and the events are the Queen's escape, with Bothwell's aid, from her selfconstituted guardians, the flight and outlawry of Rizzio's slayers, the birth of the child who was afterwards to become James I of England, the investment of Bothwell with titles and estates, and the plot against Darnley, now hated by all parties alike for his treachery and double-dealing. The act ends with his ignominious death at his lonely lodgings in Kirk of Field. In the third act, Bothwell, who is denounced on every hand as the murderer of Darnley, is protected from popular vengeance by the Queen, who becomes more shameless than ever in her intercourse with him. Then follows his farcical trial and acquittal for lack of evidence, his further advancement in power and wealth, his divorce from Lady Jane Gordon, whom he had wedded only the year before, his marriage with the Queen, his flight with her to the refuge of Borthwick Castle, the siege and capture of the castle by the confederated lords, and Bothwell's escape, followed by that of the Queen in the disguise of a page. The fourth act opens with the array of the opposing forces at Carberry Hill, followed by proposals and counter-proposals to settle the engagement by single combat, and the final agreement that Bothwell shall retire unmolested while the Queen remains a prisoner. Here, after a passionate scene of parting, Bothwell disappears from the Queen's sight forever, fleeing into exile, and imprison-ment, and ignominy. The following scenes show us the Queen at Edinburgh in the hands of her captors, and John Knox in the High Street denouncing her in what is probably the longest uninterrupted speech to be found anywhere in dramatic literature, a speech of something like four hundred verses. At the close of this act the Queen is about to be conveyed to the island castle of Lochleven, which has been chosen as the safest available place for her bestowal. In the fifth act, we have the forced abdication of the Queen in favor of her infant son, and her consent to the regency of Murray, her half-brother. Then follows her escape from her island-prison, the rallying of her scattered friends to her defence, her final stand and disastrous defeat at Langside, her flight to the border, and her last view, standing on the shores of Solway Firth, of her native land. The closing words of the drama are those with which she goes into her life-long exile, and give expression, robed in the utmost magnificence of poetic diction, to the passionate resolution with which she confronts the future, and looks to it for the requital of all the wrong that has been done her, and all the shame that has been wrought upon her during her seven years' sojourn in Scotland.

"Methinks the sand yet cleaving to my foot Should not with no more words be shaken off. Nor this my country from my parting eyes Pass unsaluted; for who knows what year May see us greet hereafter? Yet take heed, Ye that have ears, and hear me; and take note, Ye that have eyes, and see with what last looks Mine own take leave of Scotland; seven years since Did I take leave of my fair land of France, My joyous mother, mother of my joy, Weeping; and now with many a woe between And space of seven years' darkness, I depart From this distempered and unnatural earth That casts me out unmothered, and go forth On this gray sterile bitter gleaming sea With neither tears nor laughter, but a heart That from the softest temper of its blood Is turned to fire and iron. If I live, If God pluck not all hope out of my hand, If aught of all mine prosper, I that go Shall come back to men's ruin, as a flame The wind bears down, that grows against the wind, And grasps it with great hands, and wins its way, And wins its will, and triumphs; so shall I Let loose the fire of all my heart to feed On these that would have quenched it. I will make From sea to sea one furnace of the land, Whereon the wind of war shall beat its wings Till they wax faint with hopeless hope of rest, And with one rain of men's rebellious blood Extinguish the red embers. I will leave No living soul of their blaspheming faith

Who war with monarchs: God shall see me reign As he shall reign beside me, and his foes Lie at my foot with mine; kingdoms and kings Shall from my heart take spirit, and at my soul Their souls be kindled to devour for prey The people that would make its prev of them, And leave God's altar stripped of sacrament As all kings' heads of sovereignty, and make Bare as their thrones his temples: I will set Those old things of his holiness on high That are brought low, and break beneath my feet These new things of men's fashion; I will sit And see tears flow from eyes that saw me weep, And dust and ashes and the shadow of death Cast from the block beneath the axe that falls On heads that saw me humbled; I will do it, Or bow mine own down to no royal end, And give my blood for theirs if God's will be, But come back never as I now go forth With but the hate of men to track my way, And not the face of any friend alive."

Thus ends a work which has the distinction of being not only the longest of Swinburne's dramas, but also the longest production of its class in the whole of English literature. The five acts are divided into sixty scenes, and comprise nearly fifteen thousand lines of blank verse. The dramatis personae number in the neighborhood of sixty, each one of whom is a character occupying a definite niche, if not a pedestal, in the history of that troublous time. The author's own comment upon Bothwell is as follows: "That ambitious, conscientious, and comprehensive piece of work is of course less properly definable as a tragedy than by the old Shakespearean term of a chronicle-history. . . This play of mine was not, I think, inaccurately defined as an epic drama in the French verses of dedication which were acknowledged by the greatest of all French poets in a letter from which I dare only quote one line of Olympian judgment and godlike generosity. 'Occuper ces deux cimes, cela n'est donné qu'à vous.' Nor will I refrain from the confession that I cannot think it an epic or a play in which any one part is sacrificed to any other, any subordinate figure mishandled or neglected or distorted or effaced for the sake of the predominant and central person. And though this has nothing or less than nothing to do with any question of poetic merit or demerit, of dramatic success or unsuccess, I will add that I took as much care and pains as though I had been writing or compiling a history of the period to do loyal justice to all the historic figures which came within the scope of my dramatic or poetic design. There is not one which I have designedly altered or intentionally modified: it is of course for others to decide whether there is one which is not the living likeness of an actual or imaginable man."

Before leaving Bothwell for a discussion of Mary Stuart, two contemporary judgments may be quoted, both framed within a year of its publication. E. C. Stedman said of it: "I agree with them who declare that Swinburne, by this massive and heroic composition, has placed himself in the front line of our poets, that no one can be thought his superior in true dramatic power. The work not only is large, but written in a large manner. It seems deficient in contrasts, especially needing the relief which humor, song, and by-play afford to a tragic plot. But it is a great historical poem, cast in a dramatic rather than epic form, for the sake of stronger analysis and dialogue. Considered as a dramatic epic, it has no parallel, and is replete with proofs of laborious study and faithful use of the rich materials afforded by the theme. . . . Bothwell exhibits no excess but that of length, and no mannerism; on the contrary, a superb manner, and a ripe, pure, and majestic style." I. A. Symonds wrote of it in these terms: "It is surely a wonderful work of art. I do not think anything greater has been produced in our age, in spite of its inordinate length and strange affectation of style. However, one reads one's self into a sympathy with his use of language, and then the sustained effort of thought and imagination is overpowering in its splendour. It seems to me the most virile exercise of the poetic power in combination with historic accuracy that our literature of this century can show." 2

The completion of the dramatic trilogy is given us in Mary Stuart, which appeared in 1881. This drama is hardly more than one third the length of Bothwell, and requires only about half as many characters for its unfolding. When it opens, over eighteen years have elapsed since the Queen crossed Solway Firth, and she is now within a few months of her doom. Exactly stated, the period of the play is from August 4, 1586, to February 8, 1587. It opens with the Babington conspiracy — the last of the many plots against Elizabeth and the commonwealth to which the captive Queen set her hand — and deals in swift succession with the capture and punishment of the conspirators, the trial of Mary for complicity in their design, her conviction of bloodguiltiness, the hesitation of Elizabeth to give effect to the judgment thereupon pronounced, the eventual signing of the death-warrant, and the execution at Fotheringay Castle. The immediate motive of this tragic consummation is provided, as has already been stated, through the agency of Mary Beaton - that one of the Queen's Maries who had been her constant companion during all her years of triumph and defeat, in Scotland and in England. Mary Beaton has never forgotten that she loved Chastelard, and has never forgiven the Queen for allowing him to go to his execution without an effort to save him. As the years pass by, the sharpness of her desire to avenge his death becomes dulled, or rather that desire becomes transformed into a sort of prophetic sense - voiced over and over again in the tragic crises of the history — that she shall never leave the side of her mistress until the consequences of that deed shall somehow recoil upon the doer, and cause the Queen to expiate with her own life the bloodshed of her old-time lover. This attitude of passive expectation is maintained by Mary Beaton until near the end, when judgment has been pronounced upon the Queen, and her life is hanging in the balance. Then the old vengeful instinct stirs once more, and the maid tips the scale against her mistress. The means of vengeance are in her possession, for she has preserved for years a letter written in bitter mood by Mary Stuart to Elizabeth and given to the maid to destroy -a letter recounting in the guise of friendly warning certain unspeakable allegations against Elizabeth's character gathered from the Countess of Shrewsbury. This letter (well known to historians as one of the documents in the case) is now despatched to Elizabeth, who is inflamed to fury upon reading it, and at once signs the death-warrant.

This invention, so richly justified by the artistic unity which it bestows upon the trilogy taken as a whole, is one of the very few departures that Swinburne has made from exact historical truth in dealing with the history of the Queen of Scots. He has not been guilty, he says, of "any conscious violation of historical chronology, except - to the best of my recollection - in two instances: the date of Mary's second marriage, and the circumstances of her last interview with John Knox. I held it as allowable to anticipate by two years the event of Darnley's nuptials, or in other words to postpone for two years the event of Chastelard's execution, as to compile or condense into one dramatic scene the details of more than one conversation recorded by Knox between Mary and himself." One has only to read Swinburne's memoir of Mary Stuart in the Encyclopaedia Britannica to realize with what scrupulous care he has dramatized the facts of her career. The very fact that he should have been chosen as the man best fitted to prepare that memoir affords convincing evidence of the thoroughness of the historical scholarship which he brought to the writing of his greatest dramatic work.

The character of Mary Stuart has been, and will continue to be, one of the insoluble problems of history. The almost endless controversies of which it has been the subject are a natural consequence of the strong religious, political, and personal partisanships to which she and her cause excited the men of her own time. And these controversies still range men into opposing parties through the persistence of the passions which they involve. The documentary evidence, moreover, upon which determination of the points at issue must be founded, is hopelessly entangled in a mesh of forgery and fabrication and falsehood. Again, many matters of importance rest upon circumstantial evidence alone, for the dark statecraft of those days pursued devious ways, and was careful to conceal its tracks, as far as it was humanly possible so to do. In such a case the insight of the poet may well prove a safer reliance than the industry of the historian; at all events, the Mary Stuart that Swinburne has constructed for us is given the consistency of a product of the creative imagination, and this without doing any serious violence to the historical record. As an elaborate piece of portraiture it is artistically convincing, and at the same time it is based in every feature upon what is at least a reasonable interpretation of the disputed conditions.

Swinburne's conception of his heroine may best be illustrated by a few quotations from the trilogy. It is

John Knox who thus describes her:

"Her soul
Is as a flame of fire, insatiable,
And subtle as thin water; with her craft
Is passion mingled so inseparably

That each gets strength from other, her swift wit
By passion being enkindled and made hot,
And by her wit her keen and passionate heart
So tempered that it burn itself not out,
Consuming to no end."

Bothwell, Act 1, Scene 2.

The Queen herself, in a scene with Bothwell, is moved by an approaching storm to this revealing utterance:

"I never loved the windless weather, nor The dead face of the water in the sun; I had rather the live wave leapt under me, And fits of foam struck light on the dark air, And the sea's kiss were keen upon my lip And bold as love's and bitter; then my soul Is a wave too that springs against the light And beats and bursts with one great strain of joy As the sea breaking. You said well, this light Is like shed blood spilt here by drops and there That overflows the red brims of the cloud And stains the moving water: yet the waves Pass, and the split light of the broken sun Rests not upon them but a minute's space; No longer should a deed, methinks, once done Endure upon the life of memory To stain the days thereafter with remorse And mar the better seasons,"

Bothwell, Act 11, Scene 6.

In the following words, placed upon the lips of Sir Drew Drury, one of the nobler of her enemies, we may clearly read Swinburne's own estimate of Mary Stuart's character:

"Nay, myself
Were fain to see this coil wound up, and her
Removed that makes it: yet such things will pluck
Hard at men's hearts that think on them, and move

Compassion that such long strange years should find So strange an end: nor shall men ever say But she was born right royal; full of sins, It may be, and by circumstance or choice Dved and defaced with bloody stains and black. Unmerciful, unfaithful, but of heart So fiery high, so swift of spirit and clear, In extreme danger and pain so lifted up, So of all violent things inviolable, So large of courage, so superb of soul, So sheathed with iron mind invincible And arms unbreached of fire-proof constancy -By shame not shaken, fear or force or death, Change, or all confluence of calamities -And so at her worst need beloved, and still Naked of help and honour when she seemed. As other women would be, and of hope Stripped, still so of herself adorable By minds not always all ignobly mad Nor all made poisonous with false grain of faith, She shall be a world's wonder to all time, A deadly glory watched of marvelling men Not without praise, not without noble tears, And if without what she would never have Who had it never, pity - yet from none Quite without reverence and some kind of love For that which was so royal."

Mary Stuart, Act IV, Scene 2.

This conception of Mary's character is reinforced by many passages in Swinburne's Britannica memoir, and in his Note on the Character of Mary Queen of Scots, both printed in the volume of prose Miscellanies. Himself a partisan of the Queen in respect of those traits which are admirable in themselves wherever found, her defender as far as consistency with the belief that her crimes were great and her doom righteous permits, he has only scorn for those who defend her at the expense of her intelligence and courage. "To vindicate her from the imputations of her vindicators" is his purpose, implicit in the trilogy, clearly expressed in the vigorous prose which serves the poem by way of appendix. Whatever opinion a rational mind may form concerning the Queen of Scots, it cannot possibly be such an opinion as her more zealous champions entertain, as embodied in the theorem "that a woman whose intelligence was below the average level of imbecility, and whose courage was below-the average level of a coward's, should have succeeded throughout the whole course of a singularly restless and adventurous career in imposing herself upon the judgment of every man and every woman with whom she ever came into any sort or kind of contact, as a person of the most brilliant abilities and the most dauntless daring." And yet to some such position as this those are driven who contend that she had no complicity in the murder of Darnley, that she was forced into the mar-riage with Bothwell by "an unscrupulous oligarchy," and that she was innocent of the plots to strike at the life of Elizabeth. Swinburne's final word upon the whole subject may be found in the following passages: "For her own freedom of will and of way, of passion and of action, she cared much; for her creed she cared something, for her country she cared less than nothing." "Considered from any possible point of view, the tragic story of her life in Scotland admits but of one interpretation which is not incompatible with the impression she left on all friends and all foes alike. And this interpretation is simply that she hated Darnley with a passionate but justifiable hatred, and loved Bothwell with a passionate but pardonable love. For the rest of her career I cannot but think that whatever was evil and ignoble in it was the work of education or of circumstance; whatever was good and noble, the gift of nature or of God."

It is not likely that Swinburne's full-length portraiture of the Queen of Scots, as exhibited in the trilogy taken as a whole, will ever be rivalled. He has done the work once for all, with such subtlety of delineation, firmness of grasp, and breadth of historical outlook, as to discourage any future attempt to deal with the same subject in an imaginative way. Past attempts of this sort have been numerous, but the best of them by comparison are fragmentary and inadequate. Scott, in The Abbot, dealt only with the episode of Lochleven Castle and its immediate consequences; Alfieri, in Maria Stuarda, with the murder of Darnley alone, seeking to clear the Queen of complicity in that crime; Schiller, in Maria Stuart, with the closing days of her life in Fotheringay Castle; and Björnson, in Maria Stuart i Skotland, with the period from the assassination of Rizzio to the marriage with Bothwell. These are the most important of the earlier works that have chosen Mary Stuart for imaginative treatment, but great as are the names attached to them, they sink into insignificance when compared with the colossal production which is the crowning work of Swinburne's life.

After the completion of Mary Stuart, Swinburne turned his attention to a subject already distinguished in English poetry by Byron's treatment, and produced (1885) the five-act tragedy of Marino Faliero, his most important dramatic work, aside from the trilogy above described. In choosing this subject he was perhaps to some extent actuated by the impulse which impelled Turner to bestow upon the National Gallery at London two of his finest works, upon the condition that they should be hung with two of the masterpieces of Claude Lorraine, that all the world might note how the English artist excelled the French in his own special domain. Swinburne's work as easily excels that of Byron in all points except possibly that of fitness for stage presentation, and not much may be claimed for either play upon that score. Byron was at his weakest in blank verse and in the construction of tragedy, while in these directions Swinburne puts forth his greatest strength. Since the subject of this tragedy has the additional advantage of engaging the republican sympathy and impassioned ardor in the worship of freedom which color and season all of Swinburne's work, it is not strange that his Marino Faliero should be an entirely noble and inspiring creation.

The historical facts have been closely followed. The insult to the young and fair wife of the Doge, the trivial sentence passed upon the offender, the ungovernable passion of Faliero when he learns of this, the proffered and accepted leadership in the popular conspiracy and the arrest of those implicated, and the final judgment pronounced upon the noble traitor, successively claim the reader's attention. That which is characteristic of Swinburne's presentation, and which, in fact, affords the keynote of his conception, is the attitude of Faliero when reason resumes its sway over his mind, and when calm reflection justifies with him the course which passion has initiated. The opportunity for revenge being offered him at the very hour when he has learned how lightly the patrician tribunal holds the insult done him, he eagerly grasps it, regardless of the future; but afterwards, when the personal motives which prompt him have lost their force with the subsidence of his anger, he is held to his course by a vivid realization of the sufferings of the Venetian people at the hands of a corrupt and unscrupulous oligarchy. The mere traitor that an hour's passion has made of him becomes merged in the liberator of the republic from its oppressors. To effect this transition in such a way as to attach the sympathy of the reader to Faliero's fortunes at the last was the most difficult and delicate part of the poet's task. Without discussing the historical justice of this conception, it must be admitted that its artistic success is brilliant. In the scene which precedes the failure of the conspiracy, as well as in the judgment scene and that which follows it, the person of Faliero becomes transfigured, and the divine halo of the deliverer invests him with its radiance.

The closing scenes rise to a poetic height that even Swinburne does not often reach. These are the words of Faliero to his nephew, keeping watch with him through the night that precedes the projected uprising:

"And this do thou
Know likewise, and hold fast, that if to-day
Dawn rise not, but the darkness drift us down,
And leave our hopes as wrecks and waifs despised

Of men that walk by daylight, not with us
Shall faith decline from earth or justice end,
Or freedom, which if dead should bid them die,
Rot, though the works and very names of us,
And all the fruit we looked for, nipped of winds
And gnawn of worms, and all the stem that bore,
And all the root, wax rotten. Here shall be Freedom, or never in this time-weary world
Justice, nor ever shall the sunrise know
A sight to match the morning, nor the sea
Hear from the sound of living souls on earth,
Free as her foam, and righteous as her tides,
Just, equal, aweless, perfect, even as she,
A word to match her music."

Act IV, Scene I.

This prophecy of the resurrection of Italy becomes even more explicit in the later scene in which Faliero, with the vision that comes to men in their dying hour, foretells the advent of Mazzini, of

"The man

Supreme of spirit, and perfect, and unlike
Me: for the tongue that bids dark death arise,
The hand that takes dead freedom by the hand
And lifts up living, others these must be
Than mine, and others than the world, I think,
Shall bear till men wax worthier.''
Act v, Scene 2.

Faliero's last words are these:

"Be not faint of heart:
I go not as a base man goes to death,
But great of hope: God cannot will that here
Some day shall spring not freedom: nor perchance
May we, long dead, not know it, who died of love
For dreams that were and truths that were not. Come.
Bring me but toward the landing whence my soul
Sets sail, and bid God speed her forth to sea."

Act v, Scene 2.

Thus ends a masterpiece of dramatic blank verse such as no other English poet of the nineteenth century—save only Shelley in The Cenci—has surpassed or even equalled. Compared with the chronicle-history of the Queen of Scots, it even has a certain advantage as poetry, because its action is not impeded by the necessity of faithfulness to the minutiae of the historical situation.

Nor does any such impediment exist in the case of Locrine (1887), the dramatic successor of Marino Faliero. There is no tangibility whatever to the legendary material upon which this drama is based, unless we allow something of that quality to have been bestowed upon it by Comus, or by the anonymous Elizabethan play once absurdly attributed to Shakespeare:

"Dead fancy's ghost, not living fancy's wraith,
Is now the storied sorrow that survives
Faith in the record of these lifeless lives."

Dedication, vIII.

The story is that of Locrine, the mythical King of Britain, and his secret love for Estrild, his "Scythian concubine." It is the dramatic situation of Rosamond over again, with the difference that the jealous queen, instead of privately doing away with her rival, gathers an army and makes war upon her unfaithful spouse. In the end, Locrine is slain, Estrild stabs herself, and their daughter Sabrina plunges into the Severn. The character of this maiden dear to many English poets, this is delineated with loving tenderness, and hers is the figure that lingers longest in the memory. Locrine occupies a unique place among Swinburne's tragedies on account of its form. It is written, not in blank verse, but in a variety of rhymed pentameters. One scene is a succession of twelve sonnets, broken only by a passage of interwoven rhymes; other scenes are in heroic couplets, and still others in ottava and terza rima. It is a task of curious interest to trace these various rhyming combinations through the drama, and perhaps no other work of Swinburne is as remarkable for its technical wizardry.

"Virgin, daughter of Locrine, Sprung from old Anchises' line,"

Five years elapsed before Swinburne produced another play, and when The Sisters (1892) appeared, it proved surprisingly unlike any of its predecessors. It is a domestic drama of the early nineteenth century, en-acted in an English country-house. The hero is a youthful soldier just returned from Waterloo. The two sisters are in love with him, and when he has declared himself for one of them, the other poisons both him and her successful rival. There is a play within the play, for the entire fourth act is given up to an Italian dramatic interlude performed by the leading characters in the larger work. This miniature tragedy, which supplies the suggestion for the tragedy that is realized in the closing act of The Sisters, is written in the author's characteristic vein of heightened poetic diction; the rest of the work which includes it is written in a simple and colloquial style which precludes the display of poetic power. The Sisters is more successful as a play than as a poem, for it exhibits the essentially dramatic instinct that grasps to the full the dramatic possibilities of each moment of the action, and that determines the succession of events with clear sight of the coming climax. The author himself speaks of it as "the only modern English play I know in which realism in the reproduction of natural dialogue and accuracy in the representation of natural intercourse between men and women of gentle birth and breeding have been found or made compatible with expression in genuine if simple blank verse." Nevertheless, The Sisters must be regarded as the least significant of Swinburne's dramas, and as a production almost unworthy of his genius.

Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards (1899), is the last in the series of Swinburne's tragedies. He speaks of it as based on "a subject long since mishandled by an English dramatist of all but the highest rank, and one which in later days Alfieri had commemorated in a magnificent passage of a wholly unhistoric and somewhat unsatisfactory play." The works here referred to are Middleton's The Witch and Alfieri's Rosmunda. The Rosmunda of Giovanni Rucellai, a much earlier work, might have been added to this list. The historical framework of all these tragedies may most conveniently be found in Gibbon, in whose pages we read how Rosamund, daughter of the Gepidæ, espoused Alboin, the slayer of her father, how she was forced by her husband to drink wine from her father's skull, and how this founder of the Lombard kingdom fell by the hand of an assassin, whose deed was instigated by the treachery of the queen, taking thus a long-delayed vengeance for her father's death. It is a grim tale, and Swinburne has invested it with all the pity, terror, and tragic irony which it demands. The diction of this drama is marked by severe restraint, which extends also, by implication at least, to the demeanor, to the very gesture, of the actors concerned. The brooding storm of passion is felt, rather than heard or seen, but the reader is not unprepared for the supreme moment in which it breaks. The inevitable fate of both king and queen is so foreshadowed that when it comes upon them in one swift last moment of the action, the spirit is not so much aroused as calmed, and echoes the words with which, as with the final chorus of a Greek tragedy, the outcome is characterized in this single verse:

"Let none make moan. This doom is none of man's."

It is a far cry from the Rosamond of Swinburne's first volume to this Rosamund of his ripened years. Although the poet's outlook upon life has remained substantially unchanged, and the leading ideas of his youth are the ideas to which he still gives expression, the passing years have by imperceptible degrees so transformed his style that an effective contrast may be made between his earlier and his later manner. Here speaks the Rosamond of 1861:

"Fear is a cushion for the feet of love,
Painted with colours for his ease-taking;
Sweet red, and white with wasted blood, and blue
Most flower-like, and the summer-spoused green
And sea-betrothed soft purple and burnt black.
All coloured forms of fear, omen, and change,
Sick prophecy and rumours lame at heel,
Anticipations and astrologies,
Perilous inscription and recorded note,
All these are covered in the skirt of love,
And when he shakes it these are tumbled forth,
Beaten and blown i' the dusty face of the air.''

The Rosamund of 1899 yields the following passage:

"Rosamund. Kiss me. Who knows how long the lord of life May spare us time for kissing? Life and love Are less than change and death.

Albovine. What ghosts are they?
So sweet thou never wast to me before.
The woman that is God — the God that is
Woman — the sovereign of the soul of man,
Our fathers' Freia, Venus crowned in Rome,
Has lent my love her girdle; but her lips
Have robbed the red rose of its heart, and left
No glory for the flower beyond all flowers
To bid the spring be glad of."

Act III.

Here is a contrast indeed! The exuberance, the color, the overwrought imagery, the verbal affluence, the Shakespearean diction, of the earlier work have vanished, and in their place we have sheer simplicity of vocabulary, passion intimated rather than expressed, imagery reduced to bare metaphor, and a diction wellnigh shorn of all mannerisms. Noting the vocabulary alone, the later passage offers only half as many words of more than one syllable as are found in the earlier extract. Here is a still more striking example of the reduction of vocabulary to its lowest terms:

"I take thine oath. I bid not thee take heed
That I or thou or each of us at once,
Couldst thou play false, may die: I bid thee think Thy bride will die, shamed. Swear me not again
She shall not: all our trust is set on thee.
What eyes and ears are keen about us here
Thou knowest not. Love, my love and thine for her,
Shall deafen and shall blind them." Act II.

In this passage there are seventy-four words, and all but three of them are monosyllables. Swinburne has often been charged with a lack of restraint; the charge is fairly justified by some of his earlier poems, but it assuredly does not lie against the dramatic work of his maturer years. Rosamund exemplifies the very extreme of poetic restraint.

The blank verse in which Swinburne's tragedies (with the exception of Locrine) are cast is as distinctively his own as it is possible for such verse to be. A dramatic poet so steeped in the work of his predecessors could hardly escape an occasional echo, and the Elizabethan influence is manifest (although in ever-decreasing degree) throughout his work. In his immature first volume, that influence produces such lines as these:

"We are so more than poor, The dear'st of all our spoil would profit you Less than mere losing; so most more than weak It were but shame for one to smite us, who Could but weep louder."

The Queen Mother, Act 1, Scene 1.

This is nothing less than Shakespearean mimicry, and other passages may be found that catch the very trick of Fletcher or of Marlowe. Scattered through the Mary Stuart trilogy we may find countless examples of phrases turned in the Elizabethan manner, as well as lines that bring to mind such modern poets as Shelley and Browning. Nevertheless, the style of the poet taken as a whole is individual, and, whatever doubt one might entertain concerning the authorship of a single line or a brief extract, one could have no doubt whatever of a whole page, any more than one could be puzzled by a page of Browning or of Tennyson. And this dramatic style, which reaches its highest level in Bothwell and Mary Stuart and Marino Faliero, although often too involved and elliptical to make the easiest of reading, has a beauty of cadence, a gravity of movement, and a nobility of diction that may be matched only in the work of the greater English poets.

Dramatic poetry must be judged according to the degree of its excellence in the three elements of style, characterization, and construction. Of the style of Swinburne's tragedies something has just been said, and the foregoing discussion of the separate works has brought forward the most conspicuous examples of his skill in portraiture. His delineation of Mary Stuart is a masterpiece of subtle penetration into the inmost recesses of a complex nature, and his conception of the historical figures by which hers is surrounded affords further evidence of his insight into character. His constructive powers, while perhaps most clearly exhibited in the dramas whose subject-matter gave him a comparatively free hand, were put to their severest test in the historical trilogy, and there achieved their most signal triumph. To give artistic symmetry to each of the separate sections of that work, and artistic unity to the whole, while keeping the historical facts — even of the minuter sort — all the time strictly in view, was a task to daunt the most courageous, and its successful performance must be reckoned among the most remarkable feats in our dramatic literature.

In the Dedicatory Epistle which prefaces his collected poems, and from which numerous quotations have already been made in the present Introduction, Swinburne says this of his plays as a whole: "Charles Lamb, as I need not remind you, wrote for antiquity: nor need you be assured that when I write plays it is with a view to their being acted at the Globe, the Red Bull, or the Black Friars." It is certain that they are not likely to be acted elsewhere, under the conditions at present surrounding the English-speaking stage, although a private performance of Locrine was given in London a few years ago, and other tentative and experimental performances may occasionally be brought about. It is interesting to inquire why these works, about. It is interesting to inquire why these works, and other works of their class, should not be put upon and other works of their class, should not be put upon the stage. To this inquiry there are two widely different answers. The simplest of them, while a superficial answer, begging the question at issue, is found satisfying to many writers upon the drama. It is that these works are unfitted for the stage. This is true, no doubt; nevertheless, the answer which the question demands must be given from a very different point of view, and should inform us that the stage — the English stage — has unfitted itself for the production of these plays. Or of any plays beging a serious literary of these plays, or of any plays having a serious literary value. In other words, the stage, turning away from its great early tradition, and becoming more and more a vehicle of mere entertainment, less and less a medium for the investment of exalted ideals with the trappings of actuality, has during the last century done its best to divorce itself from literature, with a degree of success of which its present pitiable estate affords convincing evidence. English dramatic poets, on the other hand, finding themselves unwelcome in the playhouse, have ceased to heed its requirements, and have written their plays with an eye to the satisfaction of the reader alone. There has thus appeared in English poetry the singular phenomenon of the closet drama — a species of composition which does not exist in any other modern literature to anything like the same extent. For several generations now the playhouse and the poet have been completely at odds, with the curious result that our acting plays are devoid of literary quality, while the closet drama absorbs all the energies of the men to whom we should rightly look for the rehabilitation of the theatre. Swinburne, writing of his own Marino Faliero, shows a clear comprehension of the contrast between past and present conditions, when he says that this work, "hopelessly impossible as it is from the point of view of modern stagecraft, could hardly have been found too untheatrical, too utterly given over to thought without action, by the audiences which endured and applauded the magnificent monotony of Chapman's eloquence — the fervent and inexhaustible declamation which was offered and accepted as a substitute for study of character and interest of action when his two finest plays, if plays they can be called, found favour with an incredibly intelligent and an inconceivably tolerant audience." This comparison is possibly a little forced, and is not altogether ingenuous, for Chapman's plays were hardly as successful as Swinburne would have us believe, and what success they had must be attributed in large measure to the melodramatic action which offsets their copious philosophizing. But as a protest against the narrowness of "modern stagecraft," the plea at least deserves a respectful hearing.

We must admit the closet drama to be a fact in the development of modern English literature, but we may doubt the wisdom of calling it a "heresy," as Professor Brander Matthews does, or of saying with him that "by the ill-advised action of certain English poets the breach between the stage and the men-of-letters was made to appear wider than it ought to have been." An action could not be ill-advised that was absolutely necessary if the dignity of a great literary form was to be preserved, and the "unactable dramatic poems" of Tennyson and Browning and Swinburne, besides being a rich present contribution to literature, may quite possibly at some future time come to be regarded as having exerted a powerful indirect influence upon the restoration of the English stage to its once forfeited estate. These men may then be honored for having kept the faith, instead of being censured, as they now are, for refusing to make terms with a narrow and degraded dramaturgy.

The chief tendency of the modern acting drama has been toward the development of a refined technique, and no one will deny that this is a praiseworthy aim. But technique cannot provide the substance of any art, and a play may be a technical masterpiece, yet fail lamentably in its ultimate purpose. The playwright bent upon technique is in danger of sacrificing beauty and truth and vitality to the requirements of mere stagecraft. Most modern dramatists have succumbed in some degree to this danger, and English dramatists more than others. Our average play-goer, fed all his life upon dramatic husks, finds himself at a loss in the presence of serious drama; his faculties have become atrophied and his senses dulled. The only play that gives him any pleasure is the one in which something new (and, by preference, something unexpected) happens at every moment, the play which tickles his palate as with condiments, the play which makes no demands upon the reflective side of his nature. His is the verdict by which the closet drama is condemned, and its advocates are fairly warranted in appealing to the judgment of a higher tribunal.

If we seek for the exact reason why such plays as these of Swinburne may not hope to meet with favor in the actual playhouse, it will be found in the fact that they have too much declamation and too little action for the taste of the play-goer. But for Elizabethan audiences, as Swinburne has pointed out, long speeches were no hindrance to enjoyment, and a similar remark may be made of the audiences for whom Corneille and Racine wrote plays in the great age of the French theatre. And it is surely something more than tolerant endurance that a modern French audience accords to these classics, or a modern German audience accords to these classics, or a modern German audience accords to Torquato Tasso and Nathan der Weise. If our own stage had not lost almost all contact with literature, it would make a much larger and more intelligent use of our classics than it now does, and might even unearth many a treasure now buried in the libraries and known only to the student of literature.

The upshot of these considerations seems to be that our stage, being controlled by a low, or at least a limited, sort of dramatic intelligence, is primarily responsible for the existence of the closet drama. And yet the great popularity of such plays as Knowles's Virginius and Bulwer's Richelieu shows that the poetic form offers no insuperable barrier to public favor, while the more modest but still distinctly pronounced success of Browning's A Blot in the 'Scutcheon and Tennyson's Becket gives evidence that the highest poetic genius may sometimes be something more than tolerated by our theatre-going audiences. The success with which such minor dramas as Milman's Fazio and Talfourd's Ion have occasionally been presented provides an encouraging subject for reflection, and the contemporary applause which has greeted the poetic dramas of Stephen Phillips is an augury of excellent omen. If these plays have found a public from time to time, why may we not expect that a public of some sort may yet be found for Shelley's The Cenci and Landor's Count Julian and Browning's Strafford and Tennyson's Harold - even for Swinburne's Mary Stuart and Marino Faliero? At all events, the works named in this paragraph are sufficient to make clear the fact that there is no hard and fast line between the drama of the stage and the drama of the closet, that it is possible to pass by nearly insensible gradations from the most obviously actable of plays to those that appear most remote from the practical requirements of the playhouse.

Nor does it seem altogether unreasonable to hope that English audiences may gradually acquire enough of the seriousness and artistic conscience of German and French audiences to bring more and more of the dramas now neglected within the margin of actability, and to annex to the empire of the stage much of that province of dramatic literature which is at present explored by readers alone. When that change of heart is experienced, the drama may once more occupy its rightful position in English literature, and again become — what it has never ceased to be in the literature of Continental Europe — a manifestation of the deepest consciousness of the race, and an embodiment of its highest idealism.

A considerable portion of this drama consists of fairly close paraphrase from the contemporary sources of the history of Mary Stuar. The more significant passages of this character are indicated in the Notes. The greater part of the material that Swinburne has the used may be found in the State Trials, in Labanoff's Recueil de Lettres, Instructions, et Mémoires de Marie Stuart, Reine d'Ecosse and in the Letter Book of Sir Amias Paulet.

ACT I ANTHONY BABINGTON

ACT I.

Scene I. — Babington's Lodging: a veiled picture on the wall.

Enter Babington, Tichborne, Tilney, Abington, Salisbury, and Barnwell.

Babington. Welcome, good friends, and welcome this good day

That casts out hope and brings in certainty
To turn raw spring to summer. Now not long
The flower that crowns the front of all our faiths
Shall bleach to death in prison; now the trust
That took the night with fire as of a star
Grows red and broad as sunrise in our sight
Who held it dear and desperate once, now sure,
But not more dear, being surer. In my hand
I hold this England and her brood, and all
That time out of the chance of all her fate
Makes hopeful or makes fearful: days and years,
Triumphs and changes bred for praise or shame
From the unborn womb of these unknown, are

That stand yet noteless here; ours even as God's 15 Who puts them in our hand as his, to wield And shape to service godlike. None of you But this day strikes out of the scroll of death And writes apart immortal; what we would, That have we; what our fathers, brethren, peers, Bled and beheld not, died and might not win, That may we see, touch, handle, hold it fast, May take to bind our brows with. By my life, I think none ever had such hap alive As ours upon whose plighted lives are set The whole good hap and evil of the state And of the Church of God and world of men And fortune of all crowns and creeds that hang Now on the creed and crown of this our land, To bring forth fruit to our resolve, and bear What sons to time it please us; whose mere will Is father of the future.

Tilney. Have you said?

Bab. I cannot say too much of so much good.

Til. Say nothing then a little, and hear one while:

Your talk struts high and swaggers loud for joy, And safely may perchance, or may not, here; But why to-day we know not.

Bab. No, I swear, Ye know not yet, no man of us but one, No man on earth; one woman knows, and I, I that best know her the best begot of man And noblest; no king born so kingly-souled, Nor served of such brave servants.

self,

Tichborne. What, as we? Bab. Is there one vein in one of all our hearts
That is not blown aflame as fire with air
With even the thought to serve her? and, by God,	4.5
They that would serve had need be bolder found
Than common kings find servants.
Salisbury. Well, your cause?
What need or hope has this day's heat brought forth
To blow such fire up in you?
Bab. Hark you, sirs;
The time is come, ere I shall speak of this,	50
To set again the seal on our past oaths
And bind their trothplight faster than it is
With one more witness; not for shameful doubt,
But love and perfect honour. Gentlemen,
Whose souls are brethren sealed and sworn to
mine,	55
Friends that have taken on your hearts and hands
The selfsame work and weight of deed as I,
Look on this picture; from its face to-day
Thus I pluck off the muffled mask, and bare
Its likeness and our purpose. Ay, look here;	60
None of these faces but are friends of each,
None of these lips unsworn to all the rest,
None of these hands unplighted. Know ye not What these have bound their souls to? and my-
The second secon

I that stand midmost painted here of all,
Have I not right to wear of all this ring
The topmost flower of danger? Who but I Should crown and close this goodly circle up
Of friends I call my followers? There ye stand,
Fashioned all five in likeness of mere life,
Just your own shapes, even all the man but speech,

As in a speckless mirror; Tichborne, thou, My nearest heart and brother next in deed, Then Abington, there Salisbury, Tilney there, And Barnwell, with the brave bright Irish eye That burns with red remembrance of the blood Seen drenching those green fields turned brown and grey

Where fire can burn not faith out, nor the sword That hews the boughs off lop the root there set To spread in spite of axes. Friends, take heed; These are not met for nothing here in show Nor for poor pride set forth and boastful heart To make dumb brag of the undone deed, and

The ghost and mockery of a crown unearned Before their hands have wrought it for their heads Out of a golden danger, glorious doubt, An act incomparable, by all time's mouths To be more blessed and cursed than all deeds done In this swift fiery world of ours, that drives
On such hot wheels toward evil goals or good,
And desperate each as other; but that each,
Seeing here himself and knowing why here, may set

His whole heart's might on the instant work, and hence

Pass as a man rechristened, bathed anew And swordlike tempered from the touch that turns 95 Dull iron to the two-edged fang of steel Made keen as fire by water; so, I say, Let this dead likeness of you wrought with hands Whereof ye wist not, working for mine end Even as ye gave them work, unwittingly, 100 Quicken with life your vows and purposes To rid the beast that troubles all the world Out of men's sight and God's. Are ye not sworn Or stand not ready girt at perilous need To strike under the cloth of state itself 105 The very heart we hunt for? Tich. Let not then

Too high a noise of hound and horn give note
How hot the hunt is on it, and ere we shoot
Startle the royal quarry; lest your cry
Give tongue too loud on such a trail, and we
More piteously be rent of our own hounds
Than he that went forth huntsman too, and came

To play the hart he hunted.

Bab. Ay, but, see,
Your apish poet's-likeness holds not here,
If he that fed his hounds on his changed flesh
Was charmed out of a man and bayed to death
But through pure anger of a perfect maid;
For she that should of huntsmen turn us harts
Is Dian but in mouths of her own knaves,
And in paid eyes hath only godhead on
And light to dazzle none but them to death.
Yet I durst well abide her, and proclaim
As goddess-like as maiden.

Barnwell. Why, myself
Was late at court in presence, and her eyes
Fixed somewhile on me full in face; yet, 'faith,'
I felt for that no lightning in my blood
Nor blast in mine as of the sun at noon
To blind their balls with godhead; no, ye see,

I walk yet well enough.

Abington. She gazed at you?

Barn. Yes, 'faith; yea, surely; take a Puritan oath

To seal my faith for Catholic. What, God help, Are not mine eyes yet whole then? am I blind Or maimed or scorched, and know not? by my head,

I find it sit yet none the worse for fear To be so thunder-blasted.

Abing.

Hear you, sirs?

Tich. I was not fain to hear it.

Barn. Which was he Spake of one changed into a hart? by God, There be some hearts here need no charm, I think,

To turn them hares of hunters; or if deer,

Not harts but hinds, and rascal.

Bab. Peace, man, peace! 140
Let not at least this noble cry of hounds
Flash fangs against each other. See what verse
I bade write under on the picture here:
These are my comrades, whom the peril's self Draws to it; how say you? will not all in the end

Prove fellows to me? how should one fall off Whom danger lures and scares not? Tush, take hands;

It was to keep them fast in all time's sight
I bade my painter set you here, and me
Your loving captain; gave him sight of each
And order of us all in amity.

And if this yet not shame you, or your hearts
Be set as boys' on wrangling, yet, behold,
I pluck as from my heart this witness forth

Taking out a letter.

To what a work we are bound to, even her hand 155 Whom we must bring from bondage, and again Be brought of her to honour. This is she,

Mary the queen, sealed of herself and signed As mine assured good friend for ever. Now, Am I more worth or Ballard?

Til. He it was

Bade get her hand and seal to allow of all That should be practised; he is wise.

Bab. Ay, wise!

He was in peril too, he said, God wot,
And must have surety of her, he; but I,
'T is I that have it, and her heart and trust,
See all here else, her trust and her good love
Who knows mine own heart of mine own hand writ

And sent her for assurance.

Sal. This we know;
What we would yet have certified of you
Is her own heart sent back, you say, for yours.

Bab. I say? not I, but proof says here, cries

Her perfect will and purpose. Look you, first She writes me what good comfort hath she had To know by letter mine estate, and thus Reknit the bond of our intelligence, As grief was hers to live without the same This great while past; then lovingly commends In me her own desire to avert betimes Our enemies' counsel to root out our faith With ruin of us all; for so she hath shown

All Catholic princes what long since they have wrought

Against the king of Spain; and all this while
The Catholics naked here to all misuse
Fall off in numbered force, in means and power,
And if we look not to it shall soon lack strength 185
To rise and take that hope or help by the hand
Which time shall offer them; and see for this
What heart is hers! she bids you know of me
Though she were no part of this cause, who

Worthless her own weighed with the general weal,

She will be still most willing to this end To employ therein her life and all she hath Or in this world may look for.

Tich. This rings well;
But by what present mean prepared doth hers
Confirm your counsel? or what way set forth 195
So to prevent our enemies with good speed
That at the goal we find them not, and there
Fall as men broken?

Bab. Nay, what think you, man, Or what esteem of her, that hope should lack Herein her counsel? hath she not been found 200 Most wary still, clear-spirited, bright of wit, Keen as a sword's edge, as a bird's eye swift, Man-hearted ever? First, for crown and base

Of all this enterprise, she bids me here
Examine with good heed of good event
What power of horse and foot among us all
We may well muster, and in every shire Choose out what captain for them, if we lack
For the main host a general;—as indeed
Myself being bound to bring her out of bonds
Or here with you cut off the heretic queen
Could take not this on me;—what havens, towns,

What ports to north and west and south, may we Assure ourselves to hold in certain hand For entrance and receipt of help from France, From Spain, or the Low Countries; in what place

Draw our main head together; for how long Raise for this threefold force of foreign friends Wage and munition, or what harbours choose For these to land; or what provision crave Of coin at need or armour; by what means The six her friends deliberate to proceed; And last the manner how to get her forth From this last hold wherein she newly lies: These heads hath she set down, and bids me take

Of all seven points counsel and common care With as few friends as may be of the chief Ranged on our part for actors; and thereon Of all devised with diligent speed despatch
Word to the ambassador of Spain in France,
Who to the experience past of all the estate
Here on this side aforetime that he hath
Shall join goodwill to serve us.

Til. Ay, no more?

Of us no more I mean, who being most near

To the English queen our natural mistress born 235

Take on our hands, her household pensioners,

The stain and chiefest peril of her blood

Shed by close violence under trust; no word,

No care shown further of our enterprise

That flowers to fruit for her sake?

Fear not that; 240 Bab. Abide till we draw thither - ay - she bids Get first assurance of such help to come, And take thereafter, what before were vain, Swift order to provide arms, horses, coin, Wherewith to march at word from every shire 245 Given by the chief; and save these principals Let no man's knowledge less in place partake The privy ground we move on, but set forth For entertainment of the meaner ear We do but fortify us against the plot 250 Laid of the Puritan part in all this realm That have their general force now drawn to head In the Low Countries, whence being home returned

They think to spoil us utterly, and usurp Not from her only and all else lawful heirs The kingly power, but from their queen that is (As we may let the bruit fly forth disguised) Wrest that which now she hath, if she for fear Take not their yoke upon her, and therefrom Catch like infection from plague-tainted air The purulence of their purity; with which plea We so may stablish our confederacies As wrought but for defence of lands, lives, goods, From them that would cut off our faith and these; No word writ straight or given directly forth Against the queen, but rather showing our will Firm to maintain her and her lineal heirs, Myself (she saith) not named. Ha, gallant souls, Hath our queen's craft no savour of sweet wit, No brain to help her heart with?

Tich. But our end —

No word of this yet?

Bab. And a good word, here, And worth our note, good friend; being thus prepared,

Time then shall be to set our hands on work
And straight thereon take order that she may
Be suddenly transported out of guard,
Not tarrying till our foreign force come in,
Which then must make the hotter haste; and seeing

We can make no day sure for our design Nor certain hour appointed when she might Find other friends at hand on spur of the act 280 To take her forth of prison, ye should have About you always, or in court at least, Scouts furnished well with horses of good speed To bear the tiding to her and them whose charge Shall be to bring her out of bonds, that these May be about her ere her keeper have word What deed is freshly done; in any case, Ere he can make him strong within the house Or bear her forth of it: and need it were By divers ways to send forth two or three 290 That one may pass if one be stayed; nor this Should we forget, to assay in the hour of need To cut the common posts off; by this plot May we steer safe, and fall not miserably, As they that laboured heretofore herein, 295 Through overhaste to stir upon this side Ere surety make us strong of strangers' aid. And if at first we bring her forth of bonds, Be well assured, she bids us - as I think She doubts not me that I should let this slip, 300 Forget so main a matter — well assured To set her in the heart of some strong host, Or strength of some good hold, where she may stay

Till we be mustered and the ally drawn in;

For should the queen, being scatheless of us yet As we unready, fall upon her flight, The bird untimely fled from snare to snare Should find being caught again a narrower hold Whence she should fly forth never, if cause indeed

Should seem not given to use her worse; and we Should be with all extremity pursued,

To her more grief; for this should grieve her

Than what might heaviest fall upon her.

Til. Ay?

She hath had then work enough to do to weep

For them that bled before; Northumberland,

The choice of all the north spoiled, banished, slain,

Norfolk that should have ringed the fourth sad time

The fairest hand wherewith fate ever led So many a man to deathward, or sealed up So many an eye from sunlight.

Bab. By my head, Which is the main stake of this cast, I swear There is none worth more than a tear of hers That man wears living or that man might lose, Borne upright in the sun, or for her sake Bowed down by theirs she weeps for: nay, but hear;

She bids me take most vigilant heed, that all
May prosperously find end assured, and you
Conclude with me in judgment; to myself
As chief of trust in my particular
Refers you for assurance, and commends 33
To counsel seasonable and time's advice
Your common resolution; and again,
If the design take yet not hold, as chance
For all our will may turn it, we should not Pursue her transport nor the plot laid else 33
Of our so baffled enterprise; but say
When this were done we might not come at her
Being by mishap close guarded in the Tower Or some strength else as dangerous, yet, she saith,
For God's sake leave not to proceed herein 34
To the utmost undertaking; for herself
At any time shall most contentedly
Die, knowing of our deliverance from the bonds
Wherein as slaves we are holden.
Barn. So shall I,
Knowing at the least of her enfranchisement 34
Whose life were worth the whole blood shed o'
the world
And all men's hearts made empty.
Bab. Ay, good friend,
Hora analys she of your follows that some stir

Bab. Ay, good friend, Here speaks she of your fellows, that some stir Might be in Ireland laboured to begin

Some time ere we take aught on us, that thence are the alarm might spring right on the part opposed. To where should grow the danger: she meantime

Should while the work were even in hand assay To make the Catholics in her Scotland rise And put her son into their hands, that so No help may serve our enemies thence; again, That from our plots the stroke may come, she thinks

To have some chief or general head of all Were now most apt for the instant end; wherein

I branch not off from her in counsel, yet
Conceive not how to send the appointed word
To the Earl of Arundel now fast in bonds
Held in the Tower she spake of late, who now
Would have us give him careful note of this,
Him or his brethren; and from oversea
Would have us seek, if he be there at large,
To the young son of dead Northumberland,
And Westmoreland, whose hand and name, we know,

May do much northward; ay, but this we know, How much his hand was lesser than his name When proof was put on either; and the lord Paget, whose power is in some shires of weight To incline them usward; both may now be had And some, she saith, of the exiles principal,
If the enterprise be resolute once, with these
May come back darkling; Paget lies in Spain,
Whom we may treat with by his brother's mean,
Charles, who keeps watch in Paris: then in the end

She bids beware no messenger sent forth
That bears our counsel bear our letters; these 380
Must through blind hands precede them or ensue

By ignorant posts and severally despatched;
And of her sweet wise heart, as we were fools,
—But that I think she fears not—bids take heed
Of spies among us and false brethren, chief 385
Of priests already practised on, she saith,
By the enemy's craft against us; what, forsooth,
We have not eyes to set such knaves apart
And look their wiles through, but should need misdoubt

—Whom shall I say the least on all our side?—390 Good Gilbert Gifford with his kind boy's face That fear's lean self could fear not? but God knows

Woman is wise, but woman; none so bold, So cunning none, God help the soft sweet wit, But the fair flesh with weakness taints it; why, 395 She warns me here of perilous scrolls to keep That I should never bear about me, seeing By that fault sank all they that fell before Who should have walked unwounded else of proof,

Unstayed of justice: but this following word
Hath savour of more judgment; we should let
As little as we may our names be known
Or purpose here to the envoy sent from France, Whom though she hears for honest, we must fear

His master holds the course of his design Far contrary to this of ours, which known Might move him to discovery.

Tich. Well forewarned:

Forearmed enough were now that cause at need Which had but half so good an armour on To fight false faith or France in.

Bab. Peace awhile;

Here she winds up her craft. She hath long time sued

To shift her lodging, and for answer hath None but the Castle of Dudley named as meet To serve this turn; and thither may depart, She thinks, with parting summer; whence may

Devise what means about those lands to lay For her deliverance; who from present bonds May but by one of three ways be discharged: When she shall ride forth on the moors that part Her prison-place from Stafford, where few folk 420 Use to pass over, on the same day set, With fifty or threescore men well horsed and armed,

To take her from her keeper's charge, who rides With but some score that bear but pistols; next, To come by deep night round the darkling house 425 And fire the barns and stables, which being nigh Shall draw the household huddling forth to help, And they that come to serve her, wearing each A secret sign for note and cognizance, May some of them surprise the house, whom she 430 Shall with her servants meet and second; last, When carts come in at morning, these being met In the main gateway's midst may by device Fall or be sidelong overthrown, and we Make in thereon and suddenly possess 435 The house whence lightly might we bear her forth

Ere help came in of soldiers to relief
Who lie a mile or half a mile away
In several lodgings: but howe'er this end
She holds her bounden to me all her days
Who proffer me to hazard for her love,
And doubtless shall as well esteem of you
Or scarce less honourably, when she shall know
Your names who serve beneath me; so commends

Her friend to God, and bids me burn the word. That I would wear at heart for ever; yet, Lest this sweet scripture haply write us dead, Where she set hand I set my lips, and thus Rend mine own heart with her sweet name, and end.

Tears the letter.

Sal. She hath chosen a trusty servant.

Bab. Ay, of me?

What ails you at her choice? was this not I
That laid the ground of all this work, and wrought

Your hearts to shape for service? or perchance The man was you that took this first on him, To serve her dying and living, and put on The bloodred name of traitor and the deed Found for her sake not murderous?

Sal. Why, they saw First Gifford put this on you, Ballard next, Whom he brought over to redeem your heart Half lost for doubt already, and refresh The flagging flame that fired it first, and now Fell faltering half in ashes, whence his breath Hardly with hard pains quickened it and blew The grey to red rekindling.

Bab. Sir, they lie
Who say for fear I faltered, or lost heart
For doubt to lose life after; let such know
It shames me not though I were slow of will

To take such work upon my soul and hand As killing of a queen; being once assured, Brought once past question, set beyond men's doubts

By witness of God's will borne sensibly, Meseems I have swerved not.

Sal. Ay, when once the word Was washed in holy water, you would wear Lightly the name so hallowed of priests' lips That men spell murderer; but till Ballard spake 475 The shadow of her slaying whom we shall strike Was ice to freeze your purpose.

Tich. Friend, what then?

Is this so small a thing, being English born,
To strike the living empire here at heart
That is called England? stab her present state, 480
Give even her false-faced likeness up to death,
With hands that smite a woman? I that speak,
Ye know me if now my faith be firm, and will
To do faith's bidding; yet it wrings not me
To say I was not quick nor light of heart,
Though moved perforce of will unwillingly,

Though moved perforce of will unwillingly, To take in trust this charge upon me.

Barn.

With all good will would take, and give God

With all good will would take, and give God thanks, .

The charge of all that falter in it: by heaven,
To hear in the end of doubts and doublings heaves
490

My heart up as with sickness. Why, by this The heretic harlot that confounds our hope Should be made carrion, with those following four That were to wait upon her dead: all five Live yet to scourge God's servants, and we prate And threaten here in painting: by my life, I see no more in us of life or heart Than in this heartless picture.

Bab. Peace again;
Our purpose shall not long lack life, nor they Whose life is deadly to the heart of ours
Much longer keep it; Burghley, Walsingham, Hunsdon and Knowles, all these four names writ out,

With hers at head they worship, are but now
As those five several letters that spell death
In eyes that read them right. Give me but faith
A little longer: trust that heart awhile
Which laid the ground of all our glories; think
I that was chosen of our queen's friends in France,

By Morgan's hand there prisoner for her sake
On charge of such a deed's device as ours
Commended to her for trustiest, and a man
More sure than might be Ballard and more fit
To bear the burden of her counsels — I
Can be not undeserving, whom she trusts,
That ye should likewise trust me; seeing at first

She writes me but a thankful word, and this, God wot, for little service; I return For aptest answer and thankworthiest meed Word of the usurper's plotted end, and she With such large heart of trust and liberal faith 520 As here ye have heard requites me: whom, I think.

For you to trust is no too great thing now For me to ask and have of all.

Tich. Dear friend,

Mistrust has no part in our mind of you More than in hers; yet she too bids take heed, 525 As I would bid you take, and let not slip The least of her good counsels, which to keep No whit proclaims us colder than herself

Who gives us charge to keep them; and to slight

No whit proclaims us less unserviceable
Who are found too hot to serve her than the slave

Who for cold heart and fear might fail.

Bab. Too hot!

Why, what man's heart hath heat enough or

To give for such good service? Look you, sirs,
This is no new thing for my faith to keep,
My soul to feed its fires with, and my hope
Fix eyes upon for star to steer by; she

That six years hence the boy that I was then, And page, ye know, to Shrewsbury, gave his faith To serve and worship with his body and soul For only lady and queen, with power alone To lift my heart up and bow down mine eyes At sight and sense of her sweet sovereignty, Made thence her man for ever; she whose look Turned all my blood of life to tears and fire, That going or coming, sad or glad — for yet She would be somewhile merry, as though to give Comfort, and ease at heart her servants, then Weep smilingly to be so light of mind, Saying she was like the bird grown blithe in bonds

That if too late set free would die for fear,
Or wild birds hunt it out of life — if sad,
Put madness in me for her suffering's sake,
If joyous, for her very love's sake — still Made my heart mad alike to serve her, being
I know not when the sweeter, sad or blithe,
Nor what mood heavenliest of her, all whose change

Was as of stars and sun and moon in heaven; She is well content, — ye have heard her — she, to die,

If we without her may redeem ourselves And loose our lives from bondage; but her friends Must take forsooth good heed they be not, no, Too hot of heart to serve her! And for me, Am I so vain a thing of wind and smoke That your deep counsel must have care to keep 565 My lightness safe in wardship? I sought none—

Craved no man's counsel to draw plain my plot,
Need no man's warning to dispose my deed.
Have I not laid of mine own hand a snare
To bring no less a lusty bird to lure
Than Walsingham with proffer of myself
For scout and spy on mine own friends in France

To fill his wise wide ears with large report Of all things wrought there on our side, and plots

Laid for our queen's sake? and for all his wit 575
This politic knave misdoubts me not, whom ye
Hold yet too light and lean of wit to pass
Unspied of wise men on our enemies' part,
Who have sealed the subtlest eyes up of them all.

Tich. That would I know; for if they be not blind,

But only wink upon your proffer, seeing More than they let your own eyes find or fear, Why, there may lurk a fire to burn us all Masked in them with false blindness.

Bab. Hear you, sirs?

Now by the faith I had in this my friend
And by mine own yet flawless toward him, yea
By all true love and trust that holds men fast,
It shames me that I held him in this cause
Half mine own heart, my better hand and eye,
Mine other soul and worthier. Pray you, go;
Let us not hold you; sir, be quit of us;
Go home, lie safe, and give God thanks; lie close,

Keep your head warm and covered; nay, be wise;

We are fit for no such wise folk's fellowship,
No married man's who being bid forth to fight 595
Holds his wife's kirtle fitter wear for man
Than theirs who put on iron: I did know it,
Albeit I would not know; this man that was,
This soul and sinew of a noble seed,
Love and the lips that burn a bridegroom's through

Have charmed to deathward, and in steel's good

Left him a silken spirit.

Tich. By that faith
Which yet I think you have found as fast in me
As ever yours I found, you wrong me more
Than were I that your words can make me not 605
I had wronged myself and all our cause; I hold
No whit less dear for love's sake even than love

Faith, honour, friendship, all that all my days
Was only dear to my desire, till now
This new thing dear as all these only were Made all these dearer. If my love be less Toward you, toward honour or this cause, then think

I love my wife not either, whom you know
How close at heart I cherish, but in all
Play false alike. Lead now which way you will, 615
And wear what likeness; though to all men else
It look not smooth, smooth shall it seem to me,
And danger be not dangerous; where you go,
For me shall wildest ways be safe, and straight
For me the steepest; with your eyes and heart 620
Will I take count of life and death, and think
No thought against your counsel: yea, by heaven,

I had rather follow and trust my friend and die Than halt and hark mistrustfully behind To live of him mistrusted.

Bab. Why, well said: 625
Strike hands upon it; I think you shall not find
A trustless pilot of me. Keep we fast,
And hold you fast my counsel, we shall see
The state high-builded here of heretic hope Shaken to dust and death. Here comes more proof

630

To warrant me no liar. You are welcome, sirs;

Enter Ballard, disguised, and Savage.

Good father captain, come you plumed or cowled,

Or stoled or sworded, here at any hand The true heart bids you welcome.

Ballard.

Is folly welcome to mine ears or eyes.

Nay, stare not on me stormily; I say,
I bid at no hand welcome, by no name,
Be it ne'er so wise or valiant on men's lips,
Pledge health to folly, nor forecast good hope
For them that serve her, I, but take of men
Things ill done ill at any hand alike.
Ye shall not say I cheered you to your death, Nor would, though nought more dangerous than your death

Or deadlier for our cause and God's in ours
Were here to stand the chance of, and your blood of Shed vainly with no seed for faith to sow
Should be not poison for men's hopes to drink.
What is this picture? Have ye sense or souls,
Eyes, ears, or wits to take assurance in
Of how ye stand in strange men's eyes and ears,
How fare upon their talking tongues, how dwell
In shot of their suspicion, and sustain
How great a work how lightly? Think ye not These men have ears and eyes about your ways,

Walk with your feet, work with your hands, and watch

When ye sleep sound and babble in your sleep? What knave was he, or whose man sworn and spy,

That drank with you last night? whose hireling lip

Was this that pledged you, Master Babington, To a foul quean's downfall and a fair queen's rise?

Can ye not seal your tongues from tavern speech,

Nor sup abroad but air may catch it back, Nor think who set that watch upon your lips

Yourselves can keep not on them?

Bab. What, my friends!

Here is one come to counsel, God be thanked, 665 That bears commission to rebuke us all.

Why, hark you, sir, you that speak judgment,

That take our doom upon your double tongue
To sentence and accuse us with one breath,
Our doomsman and our justicer for sin,
Good Captain Ballard, Father Fortescue,
Who made you guardian of us poor men, gave
Your wisdom wardship of our follies, chose
Your faith for keeper of our faiths, that yet
Were never taxed of change or doubted? You, 675

'T is you that have an eye to us, and take note What time we keep, what place, what company, How far may wisdom trust us to be wise Or faith esteem us faithful, and yourself Were once the hireling hand and tongue and eye 680 That waited on this very Walsingham To spy men's counsels and betray their blood Whose trust had sealed you trusty? By God's light,

A goodly guard I have of you, to crave
What man was he I drank with yesternight, 685
What name, what shape, what habit, as, for sooth,
Were I some statesman's knave and spotted spy,
The man I served, and cared not how, being dead,

His molten gold should glut my throat in hell, Might question of me whom I snared last night, 690 Make inquisition of his face, his gait, His speech, his likeness. Well, be answered then;

By God, I know not; but God knows I think
The spy most dangerous on my secret walks
And witness of my ways most worth my fear
And deadliest listener to devour my speech
Now questions me of danger, and the tongue
Most like to sting my trust and life to death
Now taxes mine of rashness.

Bal. Is he mad?

Or are ye brainsick all with heat of wine 700 That stand and hear him rage like men in storms

Made drunk with danger? have ye sworn with him

To die the fool's death too of furious fear And passion scared to slaughter of itself? Is there none here that knows his cause or me, 705 Nor what should save or spoil us?

Tich. Friend, give ear;

For God's sake, yet be counselled.

Bab. Ay, for God's!

What part hath God in this man's counsels?

Take you part with him; nay, in God's name go;

What should you do to bide with me? turn back; 710

There stands your captain.

Savage. Hath not one man here One spark in spirit or sprinkling left of shame? I that looked once for no such fellowship, But soldier's hearts in shapes of gentlemen, I am sick with shame to hear men's jangling tongues 715

Outnoise their swords unbloodied. Hear me, sirs;

My hand keeps time before my tongue, and hath But wit to speak in iron; yet as now

735

Such wit were sharp enough to serve our turn That keenest tongues may serve not. One thing

sworn 7

Calls on our hearts; the queen must singly die, Or we, half dead men now with dallying, must Die several deaths for her brief one, and stretched Beyond the scope of sufferance; wherefore here Choose out the man to put this peril on And gird him with this glory; let him pass Straight hence to court, and through all stays of Strike death into her heart.

Bab. Why, this rings right; Well said, and soldierlike; do thus, and take The vanguard of us all for honour.

ne vanguard of us all for honour.

Sav.

Av.

Well would I go, but seeing no courtly suit Like yours, her servants and her pensioners, The doorkeepers will bid my baseness back From passage to her presence.

Bab. O, for that,

Take this and buy; nay, start not from your word:

You shall not.

Sav. Sir, I shall not.

Bab. Here's more gold; Make haste, and God go with you; if the plot Be blown on once of men's suspicious breath,

We are dead, and all die bootless deaths — be swift —

And her we have served we shall but surely slay. 740 I will make trial again of Walsingham

If he misdoubt us. O, my cloak and sword — Knocking within.

I will go forth myself. What noise is that? Get you to Gage's lodging; stay not here; Make speed without for Westminster; perchance 745 There may we safely shift our shapes and fly, If the end be come upon us.

Bal. It is here.

Death knocks at door already. Fly; farewell.

Bab. I would not leave you — but they know you not —

You need not fear, being found here singly.

Bal. No. 750

Bab. Nay, halt not, sirs; no word but haste; this way,

Ere they break down the doors. God speed us well!

Exeunt all but Ballard. As they go out, enter an Officer with Soldiers.

Officer. Here's one fox yet by the foot; lay hold on him.

Bal. What would you, sirs?

Off. Why, make one foul bird fast, Though the full flight be scattered: for their kind 755 Must prey not here again, nor here put on The jay's loose feathers for the raven priest's To mock the blear-eyed marksman: these plucked off

Shall show the nest that sent this fledgeling forth, Hatched in the hottest holy nook of hell.

Bal. I am a soldier.

Off. Ay, the badge we know Whose broidery signs the shoulders of the file That Satan marks for Jesus. Bind him fast: Blue satin and slashed velvet and gold lace, Methinks we have you, and the hat's band here. So seemly set with silver buttons, all As here was down in order; by my faith, A goodly ghostly friend to shrive a maid As ever kissed for penance: pity 't is The hangman's hands must hallow him again When this lay slough slips off, and twist one rope For priest to swing with soldier. Bring him hence.

Exeunt.

Scene II. — Chartley.

Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton.

Mary Stuart. We shall not need keep house for fear to-day;

The skies are fair and hot; the wind sits well For hound and horn to chime with. I will go.

Mary Beaton. How far from this to Tixall? Nine or ten Mary Stuart. Or what miles more I care not; we shall find 5 Fair field and goodly quarry, or he lies, The gospeller that bade us to the sport, Protesting yesternight the shire had none To shame Sir Walter Aston's. God be praised, I take such pleasure yet to back my steed 10 And bear my crossbow for a deer's death well, I am almost half content — and yet I lie — To ride no harder nor more dangerous heat And hunt no beast of game less gallant. Mary Beaton. Nav. You grew long since more patient. Ah, God help! 15 Mary Stuart. What should I do but learn the word of him These years and years, the last word learnt but one,

That ever I loved least of all sad words?
The last is death for any soul to learn,

The last save death is patience.

Mary Beaton. Time enough We have had ere death of life to learn it in Since you rode last on wilder ways than theirs That drive the dun deer to his death.

Mary Stuart. Eighteen — How many more years yet shall God mete out For thee and me to wait upon their will

And hope or hope not, watch or sleep, and dream Awake or sleeping? surely fewer, I think, Than half these years that all have less of life Than one of those more fleet that flew before. I am yet some ten years younger than this queen, Some nine or ten; but if I die this year And she some score years longer than I think Be royal-titled, in one year of mine I shall have lived the longer life, and die The fuller-fortuned woman. Dost thou mind The letter that I writ nigh two years gone To let her wit what privacies of hers Our trusty dame of Shrewsbury's tongue made mine

Ere it took fire to sting her lord and me? How thick soe'er o'erscurfed with poisonous lies,

Of her I am sure it lied not; and perchance I did the wiselier, having writ my fill, Yet to withhold the letter when she sought Of me to know what villainies had it poured In ears of mine against her innocent name: And yet thou knowest what mirthful heart was

mine

To write her word of these, that had she read Had surely, being but woman, made her mad, Or haply, being not woman, had not. 'Faith, How say'st thou? did I well?

70

Mary Beaton. Ay, surely well 50 To keep that back you did not ill to write.

Mary Stuart. I think so, and again I think not; yet

The best I did was bid thee burn it. She, That other Bess I mean of Hardwick, hath Mixed with her gall the fire at heart of hell, 55 And all the mortal medicines of the world To drug her speech with poison; and God wot Her daughter's child here that I bred and loved, Bess Pierpoint, my sweet bedfellow that was, Keeps too much savour of her grandam's stock 60 For me to match with Nau; my secretary Shall with no slip of hers engraft his own, Begetting shame or peril to us all From her false blood and fiery tongue; except I find a mate as meet to match with him 65 For truth to me as Gilbert Curle hath found, I will play Tudor once and break the banns, Put on the feature of Elizabeth To frown their hands in sunder.

Mary Beaton. Were it not
Some tyranny to take her likeness on
And bitter-hearted grudge of matrimony
For one and not his brother secretary,
Forbid your Frenchman's banns for jealousy
And grace your English with such liberal love
As Barbara fails not yet to find of you

Since she writ Curle for Mowbray? and herein There shows no touch of Tudor in your mood More than its wont is; which indeed is nought; The world, they say, for her should waste, ere man Should get her virginal goodwill to wed.

Mary Stuart. I would not be so tempered of my blood,

So much mismade as she in spirit and flesh,
To be more fair of fortune. She should hate
Not me, albeit she hate me deadly, more
Than thee or any woman. By my faith,
Fain would I know, what knowing not of her now

I muse upon and marvel, if she have
Desire or pulse or passion of true heart
Fed full from natural veins, or be indeed
All bare and barren all as dead men's bones
Of all sweet nature and sharp seed of love,
And those salt springs of life, through fire and tears

That bring forth pain and pleasure in their kind To make good days and evil, all in her Lie sere and sapless as the dust of death. I have found no great good hap in all my days Nor much good cause to make me glad of God, Yet have I had and lacked not of my life My good things and mine evil: being not yet

Barred from life's natural ends of evil and good 100 Foredoomed for man and woman through the world

Till all their works be nothing: and of mine I know but this — though I should die to-day, I would not take for mine her fortune.

Mary Beaton. No?

Myself perchance I would not.

Mary Stuart. Dost thou think 105
That-fire-tongued witch of Shrewsbury spake

once truth

Who told me all those quaint foul merry tales Of our dear sister that at her desire I writ to give her word of, and at thine Withheld and put the letter in thine hand 110 To burn as was thy counsel? for my part, How loud she lied soever in the charge That for adultery taxed me with her lord And being disproved before the council here Brought on their knees to give themselves the lie 115 Her and her sons by that first lord of four That took in turn this hell-mouthed hag to wife And got her kind upon her, yet in this I do believe she lied not more than I Reporting her by record, how she said 120 What infinite times had Leicester and his queen Plucked all the fruitless fruit of baffled love That being contracted privily they might,

With what large gust of fierce and foiled desire This votaress crowned, whose vow could no man break,

Since God whose hand shuts up the unkindly womb

Had sealed it on her body, man by man Would course her kindless lovers, and in quest Pursue them hungering as a hound in heat, Full on the fiery scent and slot of lust, That men took shame and laughed and marvelled; one,

Her chamberlain, so hotly would she trace
And turn perforce from cover, that himself
Being tracked at sight thus in the general eye
Was even constrained to play the piteous hare
And wind and double till her amorous chase
Were blind with speed and breathless; but the worst

Was this, that for this country's sake and shame's Our huntress Dian could not be content With Hatton and another born her man And subject of this kingdom, but to heap The heavier scandal on her countrymen Had cast the wild growth of her lust away On one base-born, a stranger, whom of nights Within her woman's chamber would she seek To kiss and play for shame with secretly; And with the duke her bridegroom that should be,

That should and could not, seeing forsooth no man

Might make her wife or woman, had she dealt
As with this knave his follower; for by night
She met him coming at her chamber door
In her bare smock and night-rail, and thereon
Bade him come in; who there abode three hours:
But fools were they that thought to bind her will
And stay with one man or allay the mood
That ranging still gave tongue on several heats
To hunt fresh trails of lusty love; all this,
Thou knowest, on record truly was set down,
With much more villainous else: she prayed me write

That she might know the natural spirit and mind 160 Toward her of this fell witch whose rancorous mouth

Then bayed my name, as now being great with child

By her fourth husband, in whose charge I lay
As here in Paulet's; so being moved I wrote,
And yet I would she had read it, though not now 165
Would I re-write each word again, albeit
I might, or thou, were I so minded, or Thyself so moved to bear such witness; but 'T is well we know not how she had borne to read

All this and more, what counsel gave the dame, 170

With loud excess of laughter urging me
To enter on those lists of love-making
My son for suitor to her, who thereby
Might greatly serve and stead me in her sight;
And I replying that such a thing could be
But held a very mockery, she returns,
The queen was so infatuate and distraught
With high conceit of her fair fretted face
As of a heavenly goddess, that herself
Would take it on her head with no great pains
To bring her to believe it easily;
Being so past reason fain of flattering tongues
She thought they mocked her not nor lied who

They might not sometimes look her full in face For the light glittering from it as the sun; And so perforce must all her women say And she herself that spake, who durst not look For fear to laugh out each in other's face Even while they fooled and fed her vein with words,

Nor let their eyes cross when they spake to her And set their feature fast as in a frame

To keep grave countenance with gross mockery lined;

And how she prayed me chide her daughter, whom

She might by no means move to take this way,

And for her daughter Talbot was assured
She could not ever choose but laugh outright
Even in the good queen's flattered face. God wot,
Had she read all, and in my hand set down,
I could not blame her though she had sought to take

My head for payment; no less poise on earth 200 Had served, and hardly, for the writer's fee; I could not much have blamed her; all the less, That I did take this, though from slanderous lips, For gospel and not slander, and that now I yet do well believe it.

Mary Beaton. And herself

Had well believed so much, and surely seen,
For all your protest of discredit made

With God to witness that you could not take Such tales for truth of her nor would not, yet
You meant not she should take your word for this,

As well I think she would not.

Mary Stuart. Haply, no.

We do protest not thus to be believed.

And yet the witch in one thing seven years since Belied her, saying she then must needs die soon For timeless fault of nature. Now belike 215 The soothsaying that speaks short her span to be May prove more true of presage. Mary Beaton. Have you hope

The chase to-day may serve our further ends
Than to renew your spirit and bid time speed?
Mary Stuart. I see not but I may; the hour is full

Which I was bidden expect of them to bear More fruit than grows of promise; Babington Should tarry now not long; from France our friends

Lift up their heads to usward, and await
What comfort may confirm them from our part 2
Who sent us comfort; Ballard's secret tongue
Has kindled England, striking from men's hearts
As from a flint the fire that slept, and made Their dark dumb thoughts and dim disfigured hopes

Take form from his and feature, aim and strength,

Speech and desire toward action; all the shires Wherein the force lies hidden of our faith Are stirred and set on edge of present deed And hope more imminent now of help to come And work to do than ever; not this time We hang on trust in succour that comes short By Philip's fault from Austrian John, whose death Put widow's weeds on mine unwedded hope, Late trothplight to his enterprise in vain That was to set me free, but might not seal

The faith it pledged nor on the hand of hope Make fast the ring that weds desire with deed And promise with performance; Parma stands More fast now for us in his uncle's stead, Albeit the lesser warrior, yet in place 245 More like to avail us, and in happier time To do like service; for my cousin of Guise, His hand and league hold fast our kinsman king, If not to bend and shape him for our use, Yet so to govern as he may not thwart 250 Our forward undertaking till its force Discharge itself on England: from no side I see the shade of any fear to fail As those before so baffled; heart and hand Our hope is armed with trust more strong than steel 255 And spirit to strike more helpful than a sword In hands that lack the spirit; and here to-day It may be I shall look this hope in the eyes And see her face transfigured. God is good He will not fail his faith for ever. O, 260 That I were now in saddle! Yet an hour And I shall be as young again as May

And I shall be as young again as May
Whose life was come to August; like this year,
I had grown past midway of my life, and sat
Heartsick of summer; but new-mounted now 265
I shall ride right through shine and shade of spring

With heart and habit of a bride, and bear A brow more bright than fortune. Truth it is, Those words of bride and May should on my tongue

Sound now not merry, ring no joy-bells out In ears of hope or memory; not for me Have they been joyous words; but this fair day All sounds that ring delight in fortunate ears And words that make men thankful, even to me Seem thankworthy for joy they have given me

And hope which now they should not.

Mary Beaton. Nay, who knows? The less they have given of joy, the more they may;

And they who have had their happiness before Have hope not in the future; time o'erpast And time to be have several ends, nor wear One forward face and backward.

Mary Stuart. God, I pray, Turn thy good words to gospel, and make truth Of their kind presage! but our Scotswomen Would say, to be so joyous as I am, Though I had cause, as surely cause I have, Were no good warrant of good hope for me. I never took such comfort of my trust In Norfolk or Northumberland, nor looked For such good end as now of all my fears

From all devices past of policy
To join my name with my misnatured son's
In handfast pledge with England's, ere my foes
His counsellors had flawed his craven faith
And moved my natural blood to cast me off
Who bore him in my body, to come forth
Less childlike than a changeling. But not long Shall they find means by him to work their will,

Nor he bear head against me; hope was his To reign forsooth without my fellowship, And he that with me would not shall not now 300 Without or with me wield not or divide

Or part or all of empire.

Mary Beaton. Dear my queen, Vex not your mood with sudden change of thoughts;

Your mind but now was merrier than the sun Half rid by this through morning: we by noon 305

Should blithely mount and meet him.

Mary Stuart. So I said.

My spirit is fallen again from that glad strength

Which even but now arrayed it; yet what cause

Should dull the dancing measure in my blood

For doubt or wrath, I know not. Being once

forth,

My heart again will quicken. Sings.

And ye maun braid your yellow hair
And busk ye like a bride;
Wi' sevenscore men to bring ye hame,
And ae true love beside;
Between the birk and the green rowan
Fu' blithely shall ye ride.

O ye maun braid my yellow hair,
But braid it like nae bride;
And I maun gang my ways, mither,
Wi' nae true love beside;
Between the kirk and the kirkyard
Fu' sadly shall I ride.

How long since,

How long since was it last I heard or sang
Such light lost ends of old faint rhyme worn thin;
With use of country songsters? When we twain
Were maidens but some twice a span's length high,

Thou hadst the happier memory to hold rhyme,

But not for songs the merrier.

Mary Beaton. This was one That I would sing after my nurse, I think, And weep upon in France at six years old To think of Scotland.

Mary Stuart. Would I weep for that, Woman or child, I have had now years enough To weep in; thou wast never French in heart, Serving the queen of France. Poor queen that was, Poor boy that played her bridegroom! now they seem

In these mine eyes that were her eyes as far Beyond the reach and range of oldworld time As their first fathers' graves.

Enter Sir Amyas Paulet.

Paulet. Madam, if now It please you to set forth, the hour is full, 340

And there your horses ready.

Mart Stuart. Sir, my thanks. We are bounden to you and this goodly day For no small comfort. Is it your will we ride Accompanied with any for the nonce Of our own household?

Paul. If you will, to-day
Your secretaries have leave to ride with you.

Mary Stuart. We keep some state then yet. I pray you, sir,

Doth he wait on you that came here last month, A low-built lank-cheeked Judas-bearded man, Lean, supple, grave, pock-pitten, yellow-polled, 350 A smiling fellow with a downcast eye?

Paul. Madam, I know the man for none of mine.

Mary Stuart. I give you joy as you should give God thanks,

Sir, if I err not; but meseemed this man Found gracious entertainment here, and took 355 Such counsel with you as I surely thought
Spake him your friend, and honourable; but now
If I misread not an ambiguous word
It seems you know no more of him or less Than Peter did, being questioned, of his Lord.

Paul. I know not where the cause were to be sought

That might for likeness or unlikeness found Make seemly way for such comparison As turns such names to jest and bitterness; Howbeit, as I denied not nor disclaimed To know the man you speak of, yet I may With very purity of truth profess The man to be not of my following.

Mary Stuart. See

How lightly may the tongue that thinks no ill Or trip or slip, discoursing that or this With grave good men in purity and truth, And come to shame even with a word! God

We had need put bit and bridle in our lips Ere they take on them of their foolishness To change wise words with wisdom. Come, 3

sweet friend,

Let us go seek our kind with horse and hound To keep us witless company; belike, There shall we find our fellows.

Exeunt Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton.

Paul. Would to God This day had done its office! mine till then Holds me the verier prisoner.

Enter Phillipps.

Phillipps. She will go? 380
Paul. Gladly, poor sinful fool; more gladly, sir,

Than I go with her.

Phill. Yet you go not far She is come too near her end of wayfaring To tire much more men's feet that follow.

Paul. Ay.

She walks but half blind yet to the end; even now 385 She spake of you, and questioned doubtfully What here you came to do, or held what place Or commerce with me: when you caught her eye,

It seems your courtesy by some graceless chance

Found but scant grace with her.

Phill. 'T is mine own blame, 390 Or fault of mine own feature; yet forsooth

I greatly covet not their gracious hap

Who have found or find most grace with her. I pray,

Doth Wade go with you?

Paul. Nay, — what, know you not? — But with Sir Thomas Gorges, from the court, 395 To drive this deer at Tixall.

Phill. Two years since, He went, I think, commissioned from the queen To treat with her at Sheffield?

Paul. Ay, and since
She hath not seen him; who being known of here

Had haply given her swift suspicion edge Or cause at least of wonder.

Phill. And I doubt
His last year's entertainment oversea
As our queen's envoy to demand of France
Her traitor Morgan's body, whence he brought

Nought save dry blows back from the duke 4

And for that prisoner's quarters here to hang His own not whole but beaten, should not much Incline him to more good regard of her For whose love's sake her friends have dealt with him

So honourably, nor she that knows of this
Be the less like to take his presence here
For no good presage to her: you have both done well

To keep his hand as close herein as mine.

Paul. Sir, by my faith I know not, for myself,
What part is for mine honour, or wherein
Of all this action laid upon mine hand
The name and witness of a gentleman

May gain desert or credit, and increase In seed and harvest of good men's esteem For heritage to his heirs, that men unborn 420 Whose fame is as their name derived from his May reap in reputation; and indeed I look for none advancement in the world Further than this that yet for no man's sake Would I forego, to keep the name I have 425 And honour, which no son of mine shall say I have left him not for any deed of mine As perfect as my sire bequeathed it me: I say, for any word or work yet past No tongue can thus far tax me of decline 430 From that fair forthright way of gentleman, Nor shall for any that I think to do Or aught I think to say alive: howbeit, I were much bounden to the man would say But so much for me in our mistress' ear, 435 The treasurer's, or your master Walsingham's, Whose office here I have undergone thus long And had I leave more gladly would put off Than ever I put on me; being not one That out of love toward England even or God 440 At mightiest men's desire would lightly be For loyalty disloyal, or approved In trustless works a trusty traitor; this He that should tell them of me, to procure The speedier end here of this work imposed,

Should bind me to him more heartily than thanks

Might answer.

Phill. Good Sir Amyas, you and I Hold no such office in this dangerous time As men make love to for their own name's sake Or personal lust of honour; but herein 450 I pray you yet take note, and pardon me If I for the instance mix your name with mine, That no man's private honour lies at gage, Nor is the stake set here to play for less Than what is more than all men's names alive,455 The great life's gage of England; in whose name

Lie all our own impledged, as all our lives For her redemption forfeit, if the cause Call once upon us; not this gift or this, Or what best likes us or were gladliest given 460 Or might most honourably be parted with For our more credit on her best behalf, Doth she we serve, this land that made us men, Require of all her children; but demands Of our great duty toward her full deserts 465 Even all we have of honour or of life, Of breath or fame to give her. What were I Or what were you, being mean or nobly born, Yet moulded both of one land's natural womb And fashioned out of England, to deny What gift she crave soever, choose and grudge

What grace we list to give or what withhold,
Refuse and reckon with her when she bids
Yield up forsooth not life but fame to come,
A good man's praise or gentleman's repute,
Or lineal pride of children, and the light
Of loyalty remembered? which of these Were worth our mother's death, or shame that might

Fall for one hour on England? She must live
And keep in all men's sight her honour fast
Though all we die dishonoured; and myself
Know not nor seek of men's report to know
If what I do to serve her till I die
Be honourable or shameful, and its end
Good in men's eyes or evil; but for God,
I find not why the name or fear of him
Herein should make me swerve or start aside
Through faint heart's falsehood as a broken how

Snapped in his hand that bent it, ere the shaft
Find out his enemies' heart, and I that end
Whereto I am sped for service even of him
Who put this office on us.

Paul. Truly, sir,
I lack the wordy wit to match with yours,
Who speak no more than soldier; this I know,
I am sick in spirit and heart to have in hand 49:
Such work or such device of yours as yet

For fear and conscience of what worst may come I dare not well bear through.

Phill. Why, so last month
You writ my master word and me to boot
I had set you down a course for many things
You durst not put in execution, nor Consign the packet to this lady's hand
That was returned from mine, seeing all was well,

And you should hold yourself most wretched

If by your mean or order there should spring Suspicion 'twixt the several messengers Whose hands unwitting each of other ply The same close trade for the same golden end, While either holds his mate a faithful fool And all their souls, baseborn or gently bred, Are coined and stamped and minted for our use And current in our service; I thereon To assuage your doubt and fortify your fear Was posted hither, where by craft and pains The web is wound up of our enterprise 515 And in our hands we hold her very heart As fast as all this while we held impawned The faith of Barnes that stood for Gifford here To take what letters for his mistress came From southward through the ambassador of France

520

And bear them to the brewer, your honest man, Who wist no further of his fellowship Than he of Gifford's, being as simple knaves As knavish each in his simplicity, And either serviceable alike, to shift 525 Between my master's hands and yours and mine Her letters writ and answered to and fro; And all these faiths as weathertight and safe As was the box that held those letters close At bottom of the barrel, to give up 530 The charge there sealed and ciphered, and receive A charge as great in peril and in price To yield again, when they drew off the beer That weekly served this lady's household whom We have drained as dry of secrets drugged with death 535 As ever they this vessel, and return To her own lips the dregs she brewed or we For her to drink have tempered. What of this Should seem so strange now to you, or distaste So much the daintier palate of your thoughts, That I should need reiterate you by word The work of us o'erpast, or fill your ear With long foregone recital, that at last Your soul may start not or your sense recoil

To know what end we are come to, or what

We took in hand to cut this peril off By what close mean soe'er and what foul hands Unwashed of treason, which it yet mislikes Your knightly palm to touch or close with, seeing

The grime of gold is baser than of blood That barks their filthy fingers? yet with these Must you cross hands and grapple, or let fall The trust you took to treasure.

Paul. Sir, I will, Even till the queen take back that gave it; yet Will not join hands with these, nor take on mine 555 The taint of their contagion; knowing no cause That should confound or couple my good name With theirs more hateful than the reek of hell. You had these knaveries and these knaves in charge,

Not I that knew not how to handle them 560 Nor whom to choose for chief of treasons, him That in mine ignorant eye, unused to read The shameful scripture of such faces, bare Graved on his smooth and simple cheek and hrow

No token of a traitor; yet this boy, 565 This milk-mouthed weanling with his maiden chin,

This soft-lipped knave, late suckled as on blood And nursed of poisonous nipples, have you not Found false or feared by this, whom first you found

A trustier thief and worthier of his wage
Than I, poor man, had wit to find him? I,
That trust no changelings of the church of hell,
No babes reared priestlike at the paps of Rome
Who have left the old harlot's deadly dugs drawn dry,

I lacked the craft to rate this knave of price, 575 Your smock-faced Gifford, at his worth aright,

Which now comes short of promise.

Phill. O, not he; Let not your knighthood for a slippery word So much misdoubt his knaveship; here from

France,

On hint of our suspicion in his ear
Half jestingly recorded, that his hand
Were set against us in one politic track
With his old yoke-fellows in craft and creed,
Betraying not them to us but ourselves to them,
My Gilbert writes me with such heat of hand
Such piteous protestation of his faith
So stuffed and swoln with burly-bellied oaths
And God and Christ confound him if he lie
And Jesus save him as he speaks mere truth,
My gracious godly priestling, that yourself
Must sure be moved to take his truth on trust
Or stand for him approved an atheist.

Paul. Well,

That you find stuff of laughter in such gear And mirth to make out of the godless mouth Of such a twice-turned villain, for my part 595 I take in token of your certain trust, And make therewith mine own assurance sure, To see betimes an end of all such craft As takes the faith forsworn of loud-tongued liars And blasphemies of brothel-breathing knaves To build its hope or break its jest upon; And so commend you to your charge, and take Mine own on me less gladly; for by this She should be girt to ride, as the old saw saith, Out of God's blessing into the warm sun 605 And out of the warm sun into the pit That men have dug before her, as herself Had dug for England else a deeper grave To hide our hope for ever: yet I would This day and all that hang on it were done.

Exeunt.

Scene III. - Before Tixall Park.

Mary Stuart, Mary Beaton, Paulet, Curle, Nau, and Attendants.

Mary Stuart. If I should never more back steed alive

But now had ridden hither this fair day The last road ever I must ride on earth,

25

Yet would I praise it, saying of all days gone
And all roads ridden in sight of stars and sun
Since first I sprang to saddle, here at last I had found no joyless end. These ways are smooth,

And all this land's face merry; yet I find The ways even therefore not so good to ride, And all the land's face therefore less worth love, 10 Being smoother for a palfrey's maiden pace And merrier than our moors for outlook; nay, I lie to say so; there the wind and sun Make madder mirth by midsummer, and fill With broader breath and lustier length of light The heartier hours that clothe for even and dawn Our bosom-belted billowy-blossoming hills Whose hearts break out in laughter like the sea For miles of heaving heather. Ye should mock My banished praise of Scotland; and in faith I praised it but to prick you on to praise Of your own goodly land; though field and wood Be parked and parcelled to the sky's edge out, And this green Stafford moorland smooth and strait

That we but now rode over, and by ours
Look pale for lack of large live mountain bloom
Wind-buffeted with morning, it should be Worth praise of men whose lineal honour lives
In keeping here of history: but meseems

I have heard, Sir Amyas, of your liberal west As of a land more affluent-souled than this And fruitful-hearted as the south-wind; here I find a fair-faced change of temperate clime From that bald hill-brow in a broad bare plain Where winter laid us both his prisoners late Fast by the feet at Tutbury; but men say Your birthright in this land is fallen more fair In goodlier ground of heritage: perchance, Grief to be now barred thence by mean of me, Who less than you can help it or myself, Makes you ride sad and sullen.

Paulet. Madam, no;

I pray you lay not to my wilful charge
The blame or burden of discourtesy
That but the time should bear which lays on me
This weight of thoughts untimely.

Mary Stuart. Nay, fair sir, 4

If I, that have no cause in life to seem Glad of my sad life more than prisoners may,
Take comfort yet of sunshine, he methinks
That holds in ward my days and nights might well

Take no less pleasure of this broad blithe air Than his poor charge that too much troubles him.

What, are we nigh the chase?

Paul. Even hard at hand.

Mary Stuart. Can I not see between the glittering leaves Gleam the dun hides and flash the startled horns That we must charge and scatter? Were I queen 55 And had a crown to wager on my hand, Sir, I would set it on the chance to-day To shoot a flight beyond you. Paul. The hazard were too heavy for my skill: I would not hold your wager. Mary Stuart. No! and why? 60 Paul. For fear to come a bowshot short of you On the left hand, unluckily. Mary Stuart. My friend, Our keeper's wit-shaft is too keen for ours To match its edge with pointless iron. — Sir, Your tongue shoots further than my hand or eve 65 With sense or aim can follow. — Gilbert Curle, Your heart yet halts behind this cry of hounds, Hunting your own deer's trail at home, who lies Now close in covert till her bearing-time Be full to bring forth kindly fruit of kind 70 To love that yet lacks issue; and in sooth I blame you not to bid all sport go by For one white doe's sake travailing, who myself Think long till I may take within mine arm

The soft fawn suckling that is yeaned not yet
But is to make her mother. We must hold
A goodly christening feast with prisoner's cheer
And mirth enow for such a tender thing
As will not weep more to be born in bonds
Than babes born out of gaoler's ward, nor grudge

To find no friend more fortunate than I Nor happier hand to welcome it, nor name More prosperous than poor mine to wear, if God Shall send the new-made mother's breast, for love

Of us that love his mother's maidenhood, A maid to be my namechild, and in all Save love to them that love her, by God's grace, Most unlike me; for whose unborn sweet sake Pray you meantime be merry. — 'Faith, methinks Here be more huntsmen out afield to-day And merrier than my guardian. Sir, look up; What think you of these riders? — All my friends, Make on to meet them.

Paul. There shall need no haste;

They ride not slack or lamely.

Mary Stuart. Now, fair sir,
What say you to my chance on wager? here
I think to outshoot your archery.— By my life,

That too must fail if hope now fail me; these

That ride so far off yet, being come, shall bring Death or deliverance. Prithee, speak but once;

Aside to Mary Beaton.

Say, these are they we looked for; say, thou too 100 Hadst hope to meet them; say, they should be here,

And I did well to look for them; O God! Say but I was not mad to hope; see there; Speak, or I die.

Mary Beaton. Nay, not before they come.

Mary Stuart. Dost thou not hear my heart?

it speaks so loud

I can hear nothing of them. Yet I will not Fail in mine enemy's sight. This is mine hour That was to be for triumph; God, I pray, Stretch not its length out longer!

Mary Beaton. It is past.

Enter Sir Thomas Gorges, Sir William Wade, and Soldiers.

Mary Stuart. What man is this that stands across our way?

Gorges. One that hath warrant, madam, from the queen

To arrest your French and English secretary
And for more surety see yourself removed
To present ward at Tixall here hard by,
As in this paper stands of her subscribed.
Lay hands on them.

115

Mary Stuart. Was this your riddle's word?

To Paulet.

You have shot beyond me indeed, and shot to death

Your honour with my life. — Draw, sirs, and stand;

Ye have swords yet left to strike with once, and die

By these our foes are girt with. Some good friend —

I should have one yet left of you — take heart And slay me here. For God's love, draw; they have not

So large a vantage of us we must needs
Bear back one foot from peril. Give not way;
Ye shall but die more shamefully than here
Who can but here die fighting. What, no man?
Must I find never at my need alive
A man with heart to help me? O, my God,
Let me die now and foil them! Paulet, you,
Most knightly liar and traitor, was not this Part of your charge, to play my hangman too,
Who have played so well my doomsman, and betrayed

So honourably my trust, so bravely set A snare so loyal to make sure for death So poor a foolish woman? Sir, or you That have this gallant office, great as his,

135

To do the deadliest errand and most vile That even your mistress ever laid on man And sent her basest knave to bear and slay, You are likewise of her chivalry, and should not 140 Shrink to fulfil your title; being a knight, For her dear sake that made you, lose not heart To strike for her one worthy stroke, that may Rid me defenceless of the loathed long life She gapes for like a bloodhound. Nay, I find 145 A face beside you that should bear for me Not life inscribed upon it; two years since I read therein at Sheffield what goodwill She bare toward me that sent to treat withal So mean a man and shameless, by his tongue 150 To smite mine honour on the face, and turn My name of queen to servant; by his hand So let her turn my life's name now to death, Which I would take more thankfully than shame To plead and thus prevail not. Paul. Madam, no. 155 With us you may not in such suit prevail

With us you may not in such suit prevail
Nor we by words or wrath of yours be moved
To turn their edge back on you, nor remit
The least part of our office, which deserves
Nor scorn of you nor wonder, whose own act
Has laid it on us; wherefore with less rage
Please you take thought now to submit yourself,
Even for your own more honour, to the effect

Whose cause was of your own device, that here Bears fruit unlooked for; which being ripe in time of You cannot choose but taste of, nor may we But do the season's bidding, and the queen's Who weeps at heart to know it. — Disarm these men:

Take you the prisoners to your present ward And hence again to London; here meanwhile some week or twain their lady must lie close And with a patient or impatient heart Expect an end and word of judgment: I Must with Sir William back to Chartley straight And there make inquisition ere day close What secret serpents of what treasons hatched May in this lady's papers lurk, whence we Must pluck the fangs forth of them yet unfleshed, And lay these plots like dead and strangled snakes Naked before the council.

Mary Stuart. I must go?
Gorges. Madam, no help; I pray your pardon.
Mary Stuart. Ay?

Had I your pardon in this hand to give, And here in this my vengeance — Words, and words!

God, for thy pity! what vile thing is this That thou didst make of woman? even in death, s As in the extremest evil of all our lives, We can but curse or pray, but prate and weep, And all our wrath is wind that works no wreck,
And all our fire as water. Noble sirs,
We are servants of your servants, and obey
The beck of your least groom; obsequiously,
We pray you but report of us so much,
Submit us to you. Yet would I take farewell,
May it not displease you, for old service' sake,
Of one my servant here that was, and now
Hath no word for me; yet I blame him not,
Who am past all help of man; God witness me,
I would not chide now, Gilbert, though my tongue

Had strength yet left for chiding, and its edge
Were yet a sword to smite with, or my wrath
A thing that babes might shrink at; only this Take with you for your poor queen's true last word.

That if they let me live so long to see
The fair wife's face again from whose soft side,
Now labouring with your child, by violent hands 205
You are reft perforce for my sake, while I live
I will have charge of her more carefully
Than of mine own life's keeping, which indeed
I think not long to keep, nor care, God knows,
How soon or how men take it. Nay, good friend, 210
Weep not; my weeping time is wellnigh past,
And theirs whose eyes have too much wept for me

Should last no longer. Sirs, I give you thanks
For thus much grace and patience shown of you,
My gentle gaolers, towards a queen unqueened 215
Who shall nor get nor crave again of man
What grace may rest in him to give her.
Come.

Bring me to bonds again, and her with me
That hath not stood so nigh me all these years
To fall ere life doth from my side, or take
Her way to death without me till I die.

END OF THE FIRST ACT.

ACT II WALSINGHAM

ACT II.

Scene I. - Windsor Castle.

Queen Elizabeth and Sir Francis Walsingham.

Elizabeth. What will ye make me? Let the council know

I am yet their loving mistress, but they lay
Too strange a burden on my love who send
As to their servant word what ways to take,
What sentence of my subjects given subscribe
And in mine own name utter. Bid them wait;
Have I not patience? and was never quick
To teach my tongue the deadly word of death, Lest one day strange tongues blot my fame with blood;

IO

The red addition of my sister's name Shall brand not mine.

Walsingham. God grant your mercy shown
Mark not your memory like a martyr's red
With pure imperial heart's-blood of your own Shed through your own sweet-spirited height of heart

That held your hand from justice.

Eliz. I would rather 15
Stand in God's sight so signed with mine own blood

Than with a sister's — innocent; or indeed
Though guilty — being a sister's — might I choose,

As being a queen I may not surely — no — I may not choose, you tell me.

Wal. Nay, no man

Hath license of so large election given

As once to choose, being servant called of God,

If he will serve or no, or save the name And slack the service.

Eliz. Yea, but in his Word I find no word that whets for king-killing The sword kings bear for justice; yet I doubt, Being drawn, it may not choose but strike at root—

Being drawn to cut off treason. Walsingham, You are more a statesman than a gospeller; Take for your tongue's text now no text of God's.

But what the devil has put into their lips Who should have slain me; nay, what by God's grace,

Who bared their purpose to us, through pain or fear

Hath been wrung thence of secrets writ in fire At bottom of their hearts. Have they confessed? Wal. The twain trapped first in London.

Eliz. What, the priest?

Their twice-turned Ballard, ha?

Wal. Madam, not he.

Eliz. God's blood! ye have spared not him the torment, knaves?

Of all I would not spare him.

Wal. Verily, no; The rack hath spun his life's thread out so fine 40 There is but left for death to slit in twain The thickness of a spider's.

Eliz. Ay, still dumb?

Wal. Dumb for all good the pains can get of him;

Had he drunk dry the chalice of his craft
Brewed in design abhorred of even his friends
With poisonous purpose toward your majesty,
He had kept scarce harder silence.

Eliz. Poison? ay —

That should be still the churchman's household sword

Or saintly staff to bruise crowned heads from far And break them with his precious balms that smell

Rank as the jaws of death, or festal fume When Rome yet reeked with Borgia; but the rest Had grace enow to grant me for goodwill Some death more gracious than a rat's? God wot, I am bounden to them, and will charge for this.
The hangman thank them heartily; they shall not

Lack daylight means to die by. God, meseems, Will have me not die darkling like a dog, Who hath kept my lips from poison and my heart

From shot of English knave or Spanish, both Dubbed of the devil or damned his doctors, whom

My riddance from all ills that plague man's life Should have made great in record; and for wage Your Ballard hath not better hap to fee Than Lopez had or Parry. Well, he lies As dumb in bonds as those dead dogs in earth, You say, but of his fellows newly ta'en There are that keep not silence: what say these? Pour in mine ears the poison of their plot Whose fangs have stung the silly snakes to death. Wal. The first a soldier, Savage, in these

That sometime serving sought a traitor's luck Under the prince Farnese, then of late At Rheims was tempted of our traitors there, Of one in chief, Gifford the seminarist, My smock-faced spy's good uncle, to take off Or the earl of Leicester or your gracious self; And since his passage hither, to confirm

His hollow-hearted hardihood, hath had Word from this doctor more solicitous yet 80 Sent by my knave his nephew, who of late Was in the seminary of so deadly seed Their reader in philosophy, that their head, Even Cardinal Allen, holds for just and good The purpose laid upon his hand; this man 85 Makes yet more large confession than of this, Saying from our Gilbert's trusty mouth he had Assurance that in Italy the Pope Hath levies raised against us, to set forth For seeming succour toward the Parmesan, 90 But in their actual aim bent hither, where With French and Spaniards in one front of war They might make in upon us; but from France No foot shall pass for inroad on our peace Till - so they phrase it - by these Catholics here 95 Your majesty be taken, or -

Eliz. No more—
But only taken? springed but bird-like? Ha!
They are something tender of our poor personal chance—

Temperately tender: yet I doubt the springe
Had haply maimed me no less deep than life
Sits next the heart most mortal. Or — so be it
I slip the springe — what yet may shackle France,
Hang weights upon their purpose who should else
Be great of heart against us? They take time

Till I be taken — or till what signal else As favourable?

Wal. Till she they serve be brought Safe out of Paulet's keeping.

Eliz. Ay? they know him 'So much my servant, and his guard so good,
That sound of strange feet marching on our soil
Against us in his prisoner's name perchance
Might from the walls wherein she sits his guest Raise a funereal echo? Yet I think He would not dare—what think'st thou might he dare

Without my word for warrant? If I knew This-

Wal. It should profit not your grace to know 115
What may not be conceivable for truth
Without some stain on honour.

Eliz. Nay, I say not
That I would have him take upon his hand
More than his trust may warrant: yet have men,
Good men, for very truth of their good hearts
Put loyal hand to work as perilous — well,
God wot I would not have him so transgress —
If such be called transgressors.

Wal. Let the queen
Rest well assured he shall not. So far forth
Our swordsman Savage witnesses of these
That moved him toward your murder but in trust

Thereby to bring invasion over sea:
Which one more gently natured of his birth,
Tichborne, protests with very show of truth
That he would give no ear to, knowing, he saith, 130
The miseries of such conquest: nor, it seems,
Heard this man aught of murderous purpose bent
Against your highness.

Eliz. Naught? why then, again, To him I am yet more bounden, who may think, Being found but half my traitor, at my hands 135

To find but half a hangman.

Wal.

Nay, the man
Herein seems all but half his own man, being Made merely out of stranger hearts and brains
Their engine of conspiracy; for thus
Forsooth he pleads, that Babington his friend
First showed him how himself was wrought upon
By one man's counsel and persuasion, one
Held of great judgment, Ballard, on whose head
All these lay all their forfeit.

Eliz. Yet shall each
Pay for himself red coin of ransom down
In costlier drops than gold is. But of these Why take we thought? their natural-subject blood

Can wash not out their sanguine-sealed attempt,
Nor leave us marked as tyrant: only she
That is the head and heart of all your fears

Whose hope or fear is England's, quick or dead, Leaves or imperilled or impeached of blood Me that with all but hazard of mine own, God knows, would yet redeem her. I will write With mine own hand to her privily,—what else? — 155

Saying, if by word as privy from her hand She will confess her treasonous practices, They shall be wrapped in silence up, and she By judgment live unscathed.

Wal.

Being that she is,

So surely will she deem of your great grace,

And see it but as a snare set wide, or net

Spread in the bird's sight vainly.

Eliz. Why, then, well:

She, casting off my grace, from all men's grace
Cuts off herself, and even aloud avows
By silence and suspect of jealous heart
Her manifest foul conscience: on which proof
I will proclaim her to the parliament
So self-convicted. Yet I would not have
Her name and life by mortal evidence
Touched at the trial of them that now shall die 170
Or by their charge attainted: lest myself
Fall in more peril of her friends than she Stands yet in shot of judgment.

Wal. Be assured, Madam, the process of their treasons judged

Shall tax not her before her trial-time 175 With public note of clear complicity Even for that danger's sake which moves you. Eliz. Me So much it moves not for my mere life's sake Which I would never buy with fear of death As for the general danger's and the shame's Thence cast on queenship and on womanhood By means of such a murderess. But, for them, I would the merited manner of their death Might for more note of terror be referred To me and to my council: these at least Shall hang for warning in the world's wide eye More high than common traitors, with more pains Being ravished forth of their more villainous lives Than feed the general throat of justice. Her Shall this too touch, whom none that serves henceforth 190 But shall be sure of hire more terrible Than all past wage of treason. Why, so far Wal. As law gives leave — What prat'st thou me of law? Eliz. God's blood! is law for man's sake made, or man

For law's sake only, to be held in bonds,

Led lovingly like hound in huntsman's leash Or child by finger, not for help or stay, But hurt and hindrance? Is not all this land And all its hope and surety given to time Of sovereignty and freedom, all the fame 200 And all the fruit of manhood hence to be, More than one rag or relic of its law Wherewith all these lie shackled? as too sure Have states no less than ours been done to death With gentle counsel and soft-handed rule 205 For fear to snap one thread of ordinance Though thence the state were strangled. Wal. Madam, yet

There need no need be here of law's least breach,

That of all else is worst necessity -Being such a mortal medicine to the state As poison drunk to expel a feverish taint Which air or sleep might purge as easily.

Eliz. Ay, but if air be poison-struck with plague

Or sleep to death lie palsied, fools were they, Faint hearts and faithless, who for health's fair sake

Should fear to cleanse air, pierce and probe the trance,

With purging fire or iron. Have your way. God send good end of all this, and procure

Some mean whereby mine enemies' craft and his May take no feet but theirs in their own toils, 220 And no blood shed be innocent as mine.

Scene II. — Chartley.

Mary Beaton and Sir Amyas Paulet.

Paulet. You should do well to bid her less be moved

Who needs fear less of evil. Since we came Again from Tixall this wild mood of hers Hath vexed her more than all men's enmities Should move a heart more constant. Verily, I thought she had held more rule upon herself Than to call out on beggars at the gate When she rode forth, crying she had nought to give,

Being all as much a beggar too as they,

With all things taken from her.

Mary Beaton. Being so served, 10
In sooth she should not show nor shame nor spleen:

It was but seventeen days ye held her there
Away from all attendance, as in bonds
Kept without change of raiment, and to find,
Being thence haled hither again, no nobler use,
But all her papers plundered — then her keys
By force of violent threat wrung from the hand

She scarce could stir to help herself abed:
These were no matters that should move her.

Paul.

None,

If she be clean of conscience, whole of heart,
Nor else than pure in purpose, but maligned
Of men's suspicions: how should one thus wronged

But hold all hard chance good to approve her case Blameless, give praise for all, turn all to thanks That might unload her of so sore a charge, Despoiled not, but disburdened? Her great wrath

Pleads hard against her, and itself spake loud Alone, ere other witness might unseal Wrath's fierce interpretation: which ere long Was of her secretaries expounded.

Mary Beaton. Sir,

As you are honourable, and of equal heart Have shown such grace as man being manful may

To such a piteous prisoner as desires
Nought now but what may hurt not loyalty
Though you comply therewith to comfort her,
Let her not think your spirit so far incensed
By wild words of her mistress cast on you
In heat of heart and bitter fire of spleen
That you should now close ears against a prayer
Which else might fairly find them open.

Paul. Speak 40 More short and plainly: what I well may grant Shall so seem easiest granted.

Mary Beaton. There should be No cause I think to seal your lips up, though I crave of them but so much breath as may Give mine ear knowledge of the witness borne (If aught of witness were against her borne) By those her secretaries you spake of.

Paul. This

With hard expostulation was drawn forth
At last of one and other, that they twain
Had writ by record from their lady's mouth
To Babington some letter which implies
Close conscience of his treason, and goodwill
To meet his service with complicity:
But one thing found therein of deadliest note
The Frenchman swore they set not down, nor she Bade write one word of favour nor assent Answering this murderous motion toward our queen:

Only, saith he, she held herself not bound For love's sake to reveal it, and thereby For love of enemies do to death such friends As only for her own love's sake were found Fit men for murderous treason: and so much Her own hand's transcript of the word she sent Should once produced bear witness of her.

Mary Beaton.

Ay?

How then came this withholden?

Paul. If she speak
But truth, why, truth should sure be manifest,
And shall, with God's good will, to good men's joy

That wish not evil: as at Fotheringay
When she shall come to trial must be tried
If it be truth or no: for which assay
You shall do toward her well and faithfully
To bid her presently prepare her soul
That it may there make answer.

Mary Beaton. Presently?
Paul. Upon the arraignment of her friends who stand

As 't were at point of execution now Ere sentence pass upon them of their sin.

Would you no more with me?

Mary Beaton. I am bounden to you For thus much tidings granted.

Paul. So farewell. Exit.

Mary Beaton. So fare I well or ill as one who knows

He shall not fare much further toward his end. Here looms on me the landmark of my life That I have looked for now some score of years Even with long-suffering eagerness of heart And a most hungry patience. I did know,

90

Yea, God, thou knowest I knew this all that while,

From that day forth when even these eyes beheld

Fall the most faithful head in all the world,
Toward her most loving and of me most loved,
By doom of hers that was so loved of him
He could not love me nor his life at all
Nor his own soul nor aught that all men love,
Nor could fear death nor very God, or care
If there were aught more merciful in heaven
Than love on earth had been to him. Chastelard!

I have not had the name upon my lips
That stands for sign of love the truest in man
Since first love made him sacrifice of men,
This long sad score of years retributive
Since it was cast out of her heart and mind
Who made it mean a dead thing; nor, I think, 100
Will she remember it before she die
More than in France the memories of old friends
Are like to have yet forgotten; but for me,
Haply thou knowest, so death not all be death,
If all these years I have had not in my mind 105
Through all these chances this one thought in all,

That I shall never leave her till she die. Nor surely now shall I much longer serve Who fain would lie down at her foot and sleep, Fain, fain have done with waking. Yet my soul a Knows, and yet God knows, I would set not hand

To such a work as might put on the time And make death's foot more forward for her sake:

Yea, were it to deliver mine own soul
From bondage and long-suffering of my life,
I would not set mine hand to work her wrong.
Tempted I was — but hath God need of me
To work his judgment, bring his time about,
Approve his justice if the word be just
That whoso doeth shall suffer his own deed,
Bear his own blow, to weep tears back for tears,
And bleed for bloodshed? God should spare me
this

That once I held the one good hope on earth,
To be the mean and engine of her end
Or some least part at least therein: I prayed,
God, give me so much grace — who now should pray,

Tempt me not, God. My heart swelled once to know

I bore her death about me; as I think
Indeed I bear it: but what need hath God
That I should clench his doom with craft of mine?

What needs the wrath of hot Elizabeth
Be blown aflame with mere past writing read,
Which hath to enkindle it higher already proof
Of present practice on her state and life?
Shall fear of death or love of England fail
Tast
Or memory faint or foresight fall stark blind,
That there should need the whet and spur of shame

To turn her spirit into some chafing snake's
And make its fang more feared for mortal? Yet
I am glad, and I repent me not, to know
I have the writing in my bosom sealed
That bears such matter with her own hand signed

As she that yet repents her not to have writ
Repents her not that she refrained to send
And fears not but long since it felt the fire — 145
Being fire itself to burn her, yet unquenched,
But in my hand here covered harmless up
Which had in charge to burn it. What perchance

Might then the reading of it have wrought for us,
If all this fiery poison of her scoffs
Making the foul froth of a serpent's tongue
More venomous, and more deadly toward her queen

Even Bess of Hardwick's bitterest babbling tales, Had touched at heart the Tudor vein indeed?

Enough it yet were surely, though that vein Were now the gentlest that such hearts may hold And all doubt's trembling balance that way bent, To turn as with one mortal grain cast in The scale of grace against her life that writ And weigh down pity deathward.

Enter Mary Stuart.

Mary Stuart. Have we found 160 Such kindness of our keeper as may give Some ease from expectation? or must hope Still fret for ignorance how long here we stay As men abiding judgment?

Mary Beaton. Now not long,
He tells me, need we think to tarry; since
The time and place of trial are set, next month
To hold it in the castle of Fotheringay.

Mary Stuart. Why, he knows well I were full easily moved

To set forth hence; there must I find more scope
To commune with the ambassador of France
By letter thence to London: but, God help,
Think these folk truly, doth she verily think,
What never man durst yet nor woman dreamed,
May one that is nor man nor woman think,
To bring a queen born subject of no laws
Here in subjection of an alien law
By foreign force of judgment? Were she wise,
Might she not have me privily made away?

And being nor wise nor valiant but of tongue,
Could she find yet foolhardiness of heart
Enough to attaint the rule of royal rights
With murderous madness? I will think not this Till it be proven indeed.

Mary Beaton. A month come round,

This man protests, will prove it.

Mary Stuart. Ay! protests?
What protestation of what Protestant 185
Can unmake law that was of God's mouth made,

Unwrite the writing of the world, unsay
The general saying of ages? If I go, Compelled of God's hand or constrained of man's,

Yet God shall bid me not nor man enforce
My tongue to plead before them for my life.
I had rather end as kings before me, die
Rather by shot or stroke of murderous hands,
Than so make answer once in face of man
As one brought forth to judgment. Are they mad,

195

And she most mad for envious heart of all,
To make so mean account of me? Methought,
When late we came back hither soiled and spent
And sick with travel, I had seen their worst of wrong

Full-faced, with its most outrage: when I found 200

My servant Curle's young new-delivered wife Without priest's comfort and her babe unblessed

A nameless piteous thing born ere its time, And took it from the mother's arms abed And bade her have good comfort, since myself Would take all charge against her husband laid On mine own head to answer; deeming not Man ever durst bid answer for myself On charge as mortal: and mine almoner gone, Did I not crave of Paulet for a grace His chaplain might baptize me this poor babe, And was denied it, and with mine own hands For shame and charity moved to christen her There with scant ritual in his heretic sight By mine own woful name, whence God, I pray, For her take off its presage? I misdeemed, Who deemed all these and yet far more than these

For one born queen indignities enough,
On one crowned head enough of buffets: more Hath time's hand laid upon me: yet I keep Faith in one word I spake to Paulet, saying
Two things were mine though I stood spoiled of all

As of my letters and my privy coin
By pickpurse hands of office: these things yet
Might none take thievish hold upon to strip

His prisoner naked of her natural dower,
The blood yet royal running here unspilled
And that religion which I think to keep
Fast as this royal blood until I die.
So where at last and howsoe'er I fare
I need not much take thought, nor thou for love
Take of thy mistress pity; yet meseems
They dare not work their open will on me:
But God's it is that shall be done, and I Find end of all in quiet. I would sleep
On this strange news of thine, that being awake

I may the freshlier front my sense thereof And thought of life or death. Come in with me.

Scene III. — Tyburn.

A Crowd of Citizens.

Ist Citizen. Is not their hour yet on? Men say the queen

Bade spare no jot of torment in their end That law might lay upon them.

2nd Citizen. Truth it is,
To spare what scourge soe'er man's justice may Twist for such caitiff traitors were to grieve
God's with mere inobservance. Hear you not
How yet the loud lewd braggarts of their side
Keep heart to threaten that for all this foil
They are not foiled indeed, but yet the work

Shall prosper with deliverance of their queen And death for her of ours, though they should give

Of their own lives for one an hundredfold?

3rd Citizen. These are bold mouths; one that shall die to-day,

Being this last week arraigned at Westminster, Had no such heart, they say, to his defence, Who was the main head of their treasons.

1st Cit. Ay,

And yesterday, if truth belie not him,

Durst with his doomed hand write some word of prayer

To the queen's self, her very grace, to crave
Grace of her for his gracelessness, that she Might work on one too tainted to deserve
A miracle of compassion, whence her fame
For pity of sins too great for pity of man Might shine more glorious than his crime showed foul

In the eye of such a mercy.

2nd Cit. Yet men said

He spake at his arraignment soberly With clear mild looks and gracious gesture, showing

The purport of his treasons in such wise That it seemed pity of him to hear them, how All their beginnings and proceedings had

55

First head and fountain only for their spring
From ill persuasions of that poisonous priest
Who stood the guiltiest near, by this man's side Approved a valiant villain. Barnwell next,
Who came but late from Ireland here to court,
Made simply protestation of design
To work no personal ill against the queen
Nor paint rebellion's face as murder's red
With blood imperial: Tichborne then avowed
He knew the secret of their aim, and kept,
And held forsooth himself no traitor; yet
In the end would even plead guilty, Donne with him,

And Salisbury, who not less professed he still Stood out against the killing of the queen, And would not hurt her for a kingdom: so, When thus all these had pleaded, one by one Was each man bid say fairly, for his part, Why sentence should not pass: and Ballard first, Who had been so sorely racked he might not stand,

Spake, but as seems to none effect: of whom Said Babington again, he set them on, He first, and most of all him, who believed This priest had power to assoil his soul alive Of all else mortal treason: Ballard then, As in sad scorn—Yea, Master Babington, Quoth he, lay all upon me, but I wish

For you the shedding of my blood might be
The saving of your life: howbeit, for that,
Say what you will; and I will say no more.
Nor spake the swordsman Savage aught again,
Who, first arraigned, had first avowed his cause Guilty: nor yet spake Tichborne aught: but Donne

Spake, and the same said Barnwell, each had sinned

Besought the queen remission of his guilt.

Then spake Sir Christopher Hatton for the rest
That sat with him commissioners, and showed How by dark doctrine of the seminaries
And instance most of Ballard had been brought
To extreme destruction here of body and soul
A sort of brave youths otherwise endowed
With goodly gifts of birthright: and in fine
There was the sentence given that here even

Shows seven for dead men in our present sight And shall bring six to-morrow forth to die.

Enter Babington, Ballard (carried in a chair), Tichborne, Savage, Barnwell, Tilney, and Abington, guarded: Sheriff, Executioner, Chaplain, &c.

1st Cit. What, will they speak?
2nd Cit. Ay; each hath leave in turn

To show what mood he dies in toward his cause.

85

Ballard. Sirs, ye that stand to see us take our doom,

I being here given this grace to speak to you
Have but my word to witness for my soul,
That all I have done and all designed to do
Was only for advancement of true faith
To furtherance of religion: for myself
Aught would I never, but for Christ's dear church

Was mine intent all wholly, to redeem
Her sore affliction in this age and land,
As now may not be yet: which knowing for truth,

I am readier even at heart to die than live.
And dying I crave of all men pardon whom
My doings at all have touched, or who thereat
Take scandal; and forgiveness of the queen
If on this cause I have offended her.

Savage. The like say I, that have no skill in speech,

But heart enough with faith at heart to die, Seeing but for conscience and the common good, 95 And no preferment but this general weal, I did attempt this business.

Barnwell. I confess

That I, whose seed was of that hallowed earth Whereof each pore hath sweated blood for Christ, Had note of these men's drifts, which I deny That ever I consented with or could In conscience hold for lawful. That I came To spy for them occasions in the court And there being noted of her majesty She seeing mine eyes peer sharply like a man's That had such purpose as she wist before Prayed God that all were well — if this were urged,

I might make answer, it was not unknown To divers of the council that I there Had matters to solicit of mine own Which thither drew me then: yet I confess That Babington, espying me thence returned, Asked me what news: to whom again I told, Her majesty had been abroad that day, With all the circumstance I saw there. Now If I have done her majesty offence I crave her pardon: and assuredly If this my body's sacrifice might yet Establish her in true religion, here Most willingly should this be offered up.

Tilney. I came not here to reason of my faith, But to die simply like a Catholic, praying Christ give our queen Elizabeth long life, And warning all youth born take heed by me.

Abington. I likewise, and if aught I have erred in aught

I crave but pardon as for ignorant sin,

Holding at all points firm the Catholic faith; And all things charged against me I confess, Save that I ever sought her highness' death: In whose poor kingdom yet ere long I fear Will be great bloodshed.

Sheriff. Seest thou, Abington, Here all these people present of thy kind Whose blood shall be demanded at thy hands If dying thou hide what might endanger them? Speak therefore, why or by what mortal mean Should there be shed such blood?

All that I know Abing. You have on record: take but this for sure, This country lives for its iniquity Loathed of all countries, and God loves it not. Whereon I pray you trouble me no more 140 With questions of this world, but let me pray And in mine own wise make my peace with God.

Bab. For me, first head of all this enterprise, I needs must make this record of myself, I have not conspired for profit, but in trust 145 Of men's persuasions whence I stood assured This work was lawful which I should have done And meritorious as toward God; for which No less I crave forgiveness of my queen And that my brother may possess my lands 150 In heritage else forfeit with my head.

Tich. Good countrymen and my dear friends you look

For something to be said of me, that am But an ill orator; and my text is worse. Vain were it to make full discourse of all This cause that brings me hither, which before Was all made bare, and is well known to most That have their eyes upon me: let me stand For all young men, and most for those born high, Their present warning here: a friend I had, Ay, and a dear friend, one of whom I made No small account, whose friendship for pure love To this hath brought me: I may not deny He told me all the matter, how set down, And ready to be wrought; which always I 165 Held impious, and denied to deal therein: But only for my friend's regard was I Silent, and verified a saying in me, Who so consented to him. Ere this thing chanced,

How brotherly we twain lived heart in heart
Together, in what flourishing estate,
This town well knows: of whom went all report

Through her loud length of Fleetstreet and the

And all parts else that sound men's fortunate names,

But Babington and Tichborne? that therein There was no haughtiest threshold found of force To brave our entry; thus we lived our life, And wanted nothing we might wish for: then, For me, what less was in my head, God knows, Than high state matters? Give me now but leave

Scarce to declare the miseries I sustained
Since I took knowledge of this action, whence
To his estate I well may liken mine,
Who could forbear not one forbidden thing
To enjoy all else afforded of the world:
The terror of my conscience hung on me;
Who, taking heed what perils girt me, went
To Sir John Peters hence in Essex, there
Appointing that my horses by his mean Should meet me here in London, whence I thought

To flee into the country: but being here
I heard how all was now bewrayed abroad:
Whence Adam-like we fled into the woods
And there were taken. My dear countrymen,
Albeit my sorrows well may be your joy,
Yet mix your smiles with tears: pity my case,
Who, born out of an house whose name descends

Even from two hundred years ere English earth Felt Norman heel upon her, were it yet

Till this mishap of mine unspotted. Sirs, 200 I have a wife, and one sweet child: my wife, My dear wife Agnes: and my grief is there, And for six sisters too left on my hand: All my poor servants were dispersed, I know, Upon their master's capture: all which things 205 Most heartily I sorrow for: and though Nought might I less have merited at her hands, Yet had I looked for pardon of my fault From the queen's absolute grace and clemency; That the unexpired remainder of my years Might in some sort have haply recompensed This former guilt of mine whereof I die: But seeing such fault may find not such release Even of her utter mercies, heartily I crave at least of her and all the world 215 Forgiveness, and to God commend my soul, And to men's memory this my penitence Till our death's record die from out the land.

Ist Cit. God pardon him! Stand back: what ail these knaves

To drive and thrust upon us? Help me, sir; 220 I thank you: hence we take them full in view: Hath yet the hangman there his knife in hand?

END OF THE SECOND ACT.

ACT III BURGHLEY

ACT III.

Scene I. The presence-chamber in Fotheringay Castle.

At the upper end, a chair of state as for Queen Elizabeth; opposite, in the centre of the hall, a chair for Mary Stuart. The Commissioners seated on either side along the wall: to the right the Earls, with Lord Chancellor Bromley and Lord Treasurer Burghley; to the left, the Barons, with the Knights of the Privy Council, among them Walsingham and Paulet; Popham, Egerton, and Gawdy, as Counsel for the Crown. Enter Mary Stuart, supported by Sir Andrew Melville, and takes her place.

Mary Stuart. Here are full many men of counsel met;

Not one for me. The Chancellor rises.

Bromley. Madam, this court is held

To make strait inquisition as by law

Of what with grief of heart our queen has heard,

A plot upon her life, against the faith

Here in her kingdom established: on which cause

Our charge it is to exact your answer here
And put to proof your guilt or innocence.

Mary Stuart (rising). Sirs, whom by strange constraint I stand before,

10

My lords, and not my judges, since no law

30

Can hold to mortal judgment answerable
A princess free-born of all courts on earth,
I rise not here to make response as one
Responsible toward any for my life
Or of mine acts accountable to man,
Who see none higher save only God in heaven:
I am no natural subject of your land
That I should here plead as a criminal charged,
Nor in such wise appear I now: I came
On your queen's faith to seek in England help
By trothplight pledged me: where by promisebreach

I am even since then her prisoner held in ward: Yet, understanding by report of you Some certain things I know not of to be Against me brought on record, by my will I stand content to hear and answer these.

Brom. Madam, there lives none born on earth so high

Who for this land's laws' breach within this land Shall not stand answerable before those laws.

Burghley. Let there be record of the prisoner's plea

And answer given such protest here set down, And so proceed we to this present charge. Gawdy. My lords, to unfold by length of circumstance

The model of this whole conspiracy

Should lay the pattern of all treasons bare 35 That ever brought high state in danger: this No man there lives among us but hath heard, How certain men of our queen's household folk Being wrought on by persuasion of their priests Drew late a bond between them, binding these With others of their faith accomplices Directed first of Anthony Babington By mean of six for execution chosen To slay the queen their mistress, and thereon Make all her trustiest men of trust away; 45 As my lord treasurer Burghley present here, Lord Hunsdon, and Sir Francis Walsingham, And one that held in charge awhile agone This lady now on trial, Sir Francis Knowles. That she was hereto privy, to her power 50 Approving and abetting their device, It shall not stand us in much need to show Whose proofs are manifoldly manifest On record written of their hands and hers. Mary Stuart. Of all this I know nothing: Babington 55

I have used for mine intelligencer, sent
With letters charged at need, but never yet
Spake with him, never writ him word of mine
As privy to these close conspiracies
Nor word of his had from him. Never came
One harmful thought upon me toward your queen,

Nor knowledge ever that of other hearts
Was harm designed against her. Proofs, ye say,
Forsooth ye hold to impeach me: I desire
But only to behold and handle them
If they in sooth of sense be tangible
More than mere air and shadow.

Burgh. Let the clerk

Produce those letters writ from Babington.

Mary Stuart. What then? it may be such were writ of him:

Be it proved that they came ever in my hands. If Babington affirm so much, I say

He, or who else will say it, lies openly.

Gaw. Here is the man's confession writ, and Ballard's the Jesuit, and the soldier's here, Savage, that served with Parma.

Mary Stuart. What of these?

Traitors they were, and traitor-like they lied.

Gaw. And here the last her letter of response Confirming and approving in each point Their purpose, writ direct to Babington.

Mary Stuart. My letter? none of mine it is: perchance

It may be in my cipher charactered, But never came from or my tongue or hand: I have sought mine own deliverance, and thereto Solicited of my friends their natural help:

90

IIO

Yet certain whom I list not name there were,
Whose offers made of help to set me free
Receiving, yet I answered not a word.
Howbeit, desiring to divert the storm
Of persecution from the church, for this
To your queen's grace I have made most earnest suit:

But for mine own part I would purchase not This kingdom with the meanest one man's death In all its commonalty, much less the queen's. Many there be have dangerously designed Things that I knew not: yea, but very late There came a letter to my hand which craved My pardon if by enterprise of some Were undertaken aught unknown of me: A cipher lightly may one counterfeit, As he that vaunted him of late in France 100 To be my son's base brother: and I fear Lest this, for aught mine ignorance of it knows, May be that secretary's fair handiwork Who sits to judge me, and hath practised late, I hear, against my son's life and mine own. 105 But I protest I have not so much as thought Nor dreamed upon destruction of the queen: I had rather spend most gladly mine own life Than for my sake the Catholics should be thus

Afflicted only in very hate of me

And drawn to death so cruel as these tears Gush newly forth to think of.

Burgh. Here no man
Who hath showed himself true subject to the state
Was ever for religion done to death:
But some for treason, that against the queen
Upheld the pope's bull and authority.

Mary Stuart. Yet have I heard it otherwise

And read in books set forth in print as much.

Burgh. They that so write say too the queen hath here

Made forfeit of her royal dignity.

Walsingham. Here I call God to record on my part

That personally or as a private man
I have done nought misbeseeming honesty,
Nor as I bear a public person's place
Done aught thereof unworthy. I confess
That, being right careful of the queen's estate
And safety of this realm, I have curiously
Searched out the practices against it: nay,
Herein had Ballard offered me his help,
I durst not have denied him; yea, I would Have recompensed the pains he had taken. Say
I have practised aught with him, why did he not,
To save his life, reveal it?

Pray you, sir,

Mary Stuart.

Take no displeasure at me: truth it is Report has found me of your dealings, blown 135 From lip to ear abroad, wherein myself I put no credit: and could but desire Yourself would all as little make account Of slanders flung on me. Spies, sure, are men Of doubtful credit, which dissemble things 140 Far other than they speak. Do not believe That I gave ever or could give consent Once to the queen's destruction: I would never, These tears are bitter witness, never would Make shipwreck of my soul by compassing 145 Destruction of my dearest sister.

Gawdy. This
Shall soon by witness be disproved: as here
Even by this letter from Charles Paget's hand Transcribed, which Curle your secretary hath borne

Plain witness you received, touching a league
Betwixt Mendoza and Ballard, who conferred
Of this land's foreordained invasion, thence
To give you freedom.

Mary Stuart. What of this? ye shoot Wide of the purpose: this approves not me

Consenting to the queen's destruction.

Gawdy. That Stands proven enough by word of Babington

Who dying avowed it, and by letters passed

170

From him to you, whom he therein acclaims
As his most dread and sovereign lady and queen,
And by the way makes mention passingly
Of a plot laid by transference to convey
This kingdom to the Spaniard.

Mary Stuart. I confess
There came a priest unto me, saying if I
Would not herein bear part I with my son
Alike should be debarred the inheritance:
His name ye shall not have of me: but this Ye know, that openly the Spaniard lays Claim to your kingdom, and to none will give Place ever save to me.

Burghley. Still stands the charge On written witness of your secretaries Great on all points against you.

Mary Stuart. Wherefore then
Are not these writers with these writings brought To outface me front to front? For Gilbert Curle,
He is in the Frenchman's hands a waxen toy,
Whom the other, once mine uncle's secretary,
The cardinal's of Lorraine, at his mere will Moulds, turns, and tempers: being himself a knave

That may be hired or scared with peril or coin To swear what thing men bid him. Truth again Is this that I deny not, seeing myself
Against all right held fast in English ward,

I have sought all help where I might hope to find: Which thing that I dispute not, let this be The sign that I disclaim no jot of truth In all objected to me. For the rest, 185 All majesty that moves in all the world And all safe station of all princes born Fall, as things unrespected, to the ground, If on the testimony of secretaries And on their writings merely these depend, Being to their likeness thence debased: for me, Nought I delivered to them but what first Nature to me delivered, that I might Recover yet at length my liberty. I am not to be convicted save alone 195 By mine own word or writing. If these men Have written toward the queen my sister's hurt Aught, I wist nought of all such writ at all: Let them be put to punishment: I am sure, Were these here present, they by testimony Would bring me clear of blame.

Gaw. Yet by their mean They could not in excuse of you deny That letters of communion to and fro Have passed between you and the Spaniard, whence

What should have come on England and the queen 205

These both well know, and with what messages

230

Were English exiles entertained of you
By mean of these men, of your secretaries,
Confirmed and cherished in conspiracy
For this her kingdom's overthrow: in France
Paget and Morgan, traitors in design
Of one close mind with you, and in your name
Cheered hence for constant service.

Mary Stuart. That I sought
Comfort and furtherance of all Catholic states
By what mean found soever just and good,
Your mistress from myself had note long since
And open warning: uncompelled I made Avowal of such my righteous purpose, nor
In aught may disavow it. Of these late plots
No proof is here to attaint mine innocence,
Who dare all proof against me: Babington
I know not of, nor Ballard, nor their works,
But kings my kinsmen, powers that serve the church,

These I confess my comforters, in hope Held fast of their alliance. Yet again I challenge in the witness of my words The notes writ of these letters here alleged In mine own hand: if these ye bring not for Judge all good men if I be not condemned In all your hearts already, who perchance For all this pageant held of lawless law Have bound yourselves by pledge to speak me dead:

But I would have you look into your souls, Remembering how the theatre of the world Is wider, in whose eye ye are judged that judge, 235 Than this one realm of England.

Burgh. Toward that realm Suffice it here that, madam, you stand charged With deadly purpose: being of proven intent To have your son conveyed to Spain, and give The title you pretend upon our crown Up with his wardship to King Philip.

Mary Stuart. Nay, I have no kingdom left to assign, nor crown Whereof to make conveyance: yet is this But lawful, that of all things which are mine I may dispose at pleasure, and to none Stand on such count accountable.

Burgh. So be it
So far as may be: but your ciphers sent
By Curle's plain testimony to Babington,
To the lord Lodovic, and to Fernihurst,
Once provost on your part in Edinburgh
By mean of Grange your friend his father-in-law, Speak not but as with tongue imperial, nor
Of import less than kingdoms.

Mary Stuart. Surely, sir,
Such have I writ, and many; nor therein
Beyond my birth have trespassed, to commend 255
That lord you speak of, and another, both

My friends in faith, to a cardinal's dignity,
And that, I trust, without offence: except
It be not held as lawful on my part
To commune with the chiefest of my creed
By written word on matters of mine own
As for your queen with churchfolk of her kind.
Burgh. Well were it, madam, that with some

Burgh. Well were it, madam, that with some of yours

You had held less close communion: since by proof

Reiterated from those your secretaries

It seems you know right well that Morgan, who Sent Parry privily to despatch the queen,
And have assigned him annual pension.

Mary Stuart. This

I know not, whether or no your charge be truth,
But I do know this Morgan hath lost all
For my sake, and in honour sure I am
That rather to relieve him I stand bound
Than to revenge an injury done your queen
By one that lives my friend, and hath deserved
Well at mine hands: yet, being not bound to this, 275
I did affright the man from such attempts
Of crimes against her, who contrariwise
Hath out of England openly assigned
Pensions to Gray my traitor, and the Scots
Mine adversaries, as also to my son,
To hire him to forsake me.

Burgh. Nay, but seeing

By negligence of them that steered the state
The revenues of Scotland sore impaired
Somewhat in bounty did her grace bestow
Upon your son the king, her kinsman: whom 285
She would not, being to her so near of blood, Forget from charity. No such help it was
Nor no such honest service that your friends
Designed you, who by letters hither writ
To Paget and Mendoza sent as here 290
Large proffers of strange aid from oversea
To right you by her ruin.

Mary Stuart. Here was nought
Aimed for your queen's destruction: nor is this Against me to be charged, that foreign friends
Should labour for my liberty. Thus much
At sundry times I have signified aloud
By open message to her, that I would still Seek mine own freedom. Who shall bar me

Who tax me with unreason, that I sent Unjust conditions on my part to be
To her propounded, which now many times
Have alway found rejection? yea, when even
For hostages I proffered in my stead
To be delivered up with mine own son
The duke of Guise's, both to stand in pledge
That nor your queen nor kingdom should through

me

Take aught of damage; so that hence by proof I see myself utterly from all hope Already barred of freedom. But I now Am dealt with most unworthily, whose fame 310 And honourable repute are called in doubt Before such foreign men of law as may By miserable conclusions of their craft Draw every thin and shallow circumstance Out into compass of a consequence: 315 Whereas the anointed heads and consecrate Of princes are not subject to such laws As private men are. Next, whereas ye are given Authority but to look such matters through As tend to the hurt of your queen's person, yet 320 Here is the cause so handled, and so far Here are my letters wrested, that the faith Which I profess, the immunity and state Of foreign princes, and their private right Of mutual speech by word reciprocate 325 From royal hand to royal, all in one Are called in question, and myself by force Brought down beneath my kingly dignity And made to appear before a judgment-seat As one held guilty; to none end but this, 330 All to none other purpose but that I Might from all natural favour of the queen Be quite excluded, and my right cut off From claim hereditary: whereas I stand

Here of mine own goodwill to clear myself 335 Of all objected to me, lest I seem To have aught neglected in the full defence Of mine own innocency and honour. This Would I bring likewise in your minds, how once This queen herself of yours, Elizabeth, 340 Was drawn in question of conspiracy That Wyatt raised against her sister, yet Ye know she was most innocent. For me, With very heart's religion I affirm, Though I desire the Catholics here might stand 345 Assured of safety, this I would not yet Buy with the blood and death of any one. And on mine own part rather would I play Esther than Judith; for the people's sake To God make intercession, than deprive 350 The meanest of the people born of life. Mine enemies have made broad report aloud That I was irreligious: yet the time Has been I would have learnt the faith ye hold, But none would suffer me, for all I sought, To find such teaching at your teachers' hands; As though they cared not what my soul became. And now at last, when all ye can ye have done Against me, and have barred me from my right, Ye may chance fail yet of your cause and hope. 360 To God and to the princes of my kin I make again appeal, from you again

Record my protestation, and reject All judgment of your court: I had rather die Thus undishonoured, even a thousand deaths, 365 Than so bring down the height of majesty; Yea, and thereby confess myself as bound By all the laws of England, even in faith Of things religious, who could never learn What manner of laws these were: I am destitute 370 Of counsellors, and who shall be my peers To judge my cause through and give doom thereon I am ignorant wholly, being an absolute queen, And will do nought which may impair that state In me nor other princes, nor my son; 375 Since yet my mind is not dejected, nor Will I sink under my calamity. My notes are taken from me, and no man Dares but step forth to be my advocate. I am clear from all crime done against the queen, 380 I have stirred not up one man against her: yet, Albeit of many dangers overpast I have thoroughly forewarned her, still I found No credit, but have always been contemned, Though nearest to her in blood allied. When late 385 Ye made association, and thereon An act against their lives on whose behalf, Though innocent even as ignorance of it, aught Might be contrived to endangering of the queen From foreign force abroad, or privy plots 390

At home of close rebellion, I foresaw That, whatsoever of peril so might rise Or more than all this for religion's sake, My many mortal enemies in her court Should lay upon me all the charge, and I 395 Bear the whole blame of all men. Certainly, I well might take it hardly, nor without High cause, that such confederacy was made With mine own son, and I not knowing: but this I speak not of, being not so grieved thereat As that mine own dear sister, that the queen, Is misinformed of me, and I, now kept These many years in so strait prison, and grown Lame of my limbs, have lien neglected, nor For all most reasonable conditions made 405 Or proffered to redeem my liberty Found audience or acceptance: and at last Here am I set with none to plead for me. But this I pray, that on this matter of mine Another meeting there be kept, and I 410 Be granted on my part an advocate To hold my cause up; or that seeing ye know I am a princess, I may be believed By mine own word, being princely: for should I Stand to your judgment, who most plainly I see 415 Are armed against me strong in prejudice, It were mine extreme folly: more than this, That ever I came to England in such trust

As of the plighted friendship of your queen
And comfort of her promise. Look, my lords, 420
Here on this ring: her pledge of love was this
And surety sent me when I lay in bonds
Of mine own rebels once: regard it well:
In trust of this I came amongst you: none
But sees what faith I have found to keep this trust.

Burgh. Whereas I bear a double person, being Commissioner first, then counsellor in this cause.

From me as from the queen's commissioner here
Receive a few words first. Your protest made
Is now on record, and a transcript of it Shall be delivered you. To us is given
Under the queen's hand our authority, whence
Is no appeal, this grant being ratified
With the great seal of England; nor are we
With prejudice come hither, but to judge
By the straight rule of justice. On their part,
These the queen's learned counsel here in place
Do level at nothing else but that the truth
May come to light, how far you have made offence

Against the person of the queen. To us Full power is given to hear and diligently Examine all the matter, though yourself Were absent: yet for this did we desire To have your presence here, lest we might seem
To have derogated from your honour: nor 44
Designed to object against you anything
But what you knew of, or took part therein, Against the queen's life bent. For this were these

Your letters brought in question, but to unfold
Your aim against her person, and therewith
All matters to it belonging; which perforce
Are so with other matters interlaced
As none may sever them. Hence was there need

Set all these forth, not parcels here and there, Whose circumstances do the assurance give Upon what points you dealt with Babington.

Mary Stuart. The circumstances haply may find proof,

But the fact never. Mine integrity
Nor on the memory nor the credit hangs
Of these my secretaries, albeit I know 460
They are men of honest hearts: yet if they have Confessed in fear of torture anything
Or hope of guerdon and impunity,
It may not be admitted, for just cause,
Which I will otherwhere allege. Men's minds 465
Are with affections diversly distraught
And borne about of passion: nor would these
Have ever avowed such things against me, save

For their own hope and profit. Letters may Toward other hands be outwardly addressed 470
Than they were writ for: yea, and many times
Have many things been privily slipped in mine
Which from my tongue came never. Were I not Reft of my papers, and my secretary
Kept from me, better might I then confute 475
These things cast up against me.

Burgh. But there shall Be nothing brought against you save what last Stands charged, even since the nineteenth day of June:

Nor would your papers here avail you, seeing Your secretaries, and Babington himself, 480 Being of the rack unquestioned, have affirmed You sent those letters to him; which though yourself

Deny, yet whether more belief should here
On affirmation or negation hang Let the commissioners judge. But, to come back,

485

This next I tell you as a counsellor,
Time after time you have put forth many things
Propounded for your freedom; that all these
Have fallen all profitless, 't is long of you,
And of the Scots; in no wise of the queen.
For first the lords of Scotland, being required,
Flatly refused, to render up the king

In hostage: and when treaty last was held Upon your freedom, then was Parry sent By your dependant Morgan privily To make the queen away by murder.

Ah!

You are my adversary.

Mary Stuart.

Burgh. Yea, surely I am To the queen's adversaries an adversary. But now hereof enough: let us proceed Henceforth to proofs.

Mary Stuart. I will not hear them.

Burgh. Yet 500

Hear them will we.

Mary Stuart. And in another place I too will hear them, and defend myself.

Gaw. First let your letters to Charles Paget speak,

Wherein you show him there is none other way
For Spain to bring the Netherlands again
To the old obedience, but by setting up
A prince in England that might help his cause:
Then to Lord Paget, to bring hastilier
His forces up for help to invade this land:
And Cardinal Allen's letter, hailing you
His most dread sovereign lady, and signifying
The matter to the Prince of Parma's care
To be commended.

Mary Stuart. I am so sore beset

I know not how by point and circumstance
To meet your manifold impeachments: this 515
I see through all this charge for evil truth,
That Babington and my two secretaries
Have even to excuse themselves accused me:

As touching that conspiracy, this I say,
Of those six men for execution chosen
I never heard: and all the rest is nought
To this pretended purpose of your charge.
For Cardinal Allen, whatsoe'er he have writ,
I hold him for a reverend prelate, so
To be esteemed, no more: none save the Pope 525
Will I acknowledge for the church's head
And sovereign thence on thought or spirit of
mine:

But in what rank and place I stand esteemed Of him and foreign princes through the world I know not: neither can I hinder them

By letters writ of their own hearts and hands
To hail me queen of England. As for those Whose duty and plain allegiance sworn to me Stands flawed in all men's sight, my secretaries,
These merit no belief. They which have once 535
Forsworn themselves, albeit they swear again With oaths and protestations ne'er so great,
Are not to be believed. Nor may these men
By what sworn oath soever hold them bound

write:

In court of conscience, seeing they have sworn to me 540

Their secrecy and fidelity before,
And are no subjects of this country. Nau
Hath many times writ other than I bade,
And Curle sets down whate'er Nau bids him

But for my part I am ready in all to bear
The burden of their fault, save what may lay
A blot upon mine honour. Haply too
These things did they confess to save themselves;
Supposing their avowal could hurt not me,
Who, being a queen, they thought, good ignorant men,

550

More favourably must needs be dealt withal.

For Ballard, I ne'er heard of any such,
But of one Hallard once that proffered me
Such help as I would none of, knowing this man
Had vowed his service too to Walsingham.

Gaw. Next, from your letters to Mendoza,

By Curle, as freely his confession shows, In privy cipher, take these few brief notes For perfect witness of your full design. You find yourself, the Spaniard hears thereby, 560 Sore troubled what best course to take anew For your affairs this side the sea, whereon Charles Paget hath a charge to impart from you Some certain overtures to Spain and him
In your behalf, whom you desire with prayer
Show freely what he thinks may be obtained
Thus from the king his master. One point more
Have you reserved thereon depending, which
On your behalf you charge him send the king
Some secret word concerning, no man else,
If this be possible, being privy to it:
Even this, that seeing your son's great obstinacy
In heresy, and foreseeing too sure thereon
Most imminent danger and harm thence like to ensue

To the Catholic church, he coming to bear rule 575 Within this kingdom, you are resolved at heart In case your son be not reduced again To the Catholic faith before your death, whereof Plainly you say small hope is yours so long As he shall bide in Scotland, to give up 580 To that said king, and grant in absolute right, Your claim upon succession to this crown, By your last will made; praying him on this cause

From that time forth wholly to take yourself
Into his keeping, and therewith the state
And charge of all this country: which, you say,
You cannot for discharge of conscience think
That you could put into a prince's hands
More zealous for your faith, and abler found

615

To build it strong upon this side again, 590 Even as through all parts else of Christendom. But this let silence keep in secret, lest Being known it be your dowry's loss in France, And open breach in Scotland with your son, And in this realm of England utterly 595 Your ruin and destruction. On your part Next is he bidden thank his lord the king For liberal grace and sovereign favour shown Lord Paget and his brother, which you pray him Most earnestly to increase, and gratify 600 Poor Morgan with some pension for your sake Who hath not for your sake only endured so much But for the common cause. Likewise, and last, Is one he knows commended to his charge With some more full supply to be sustained 605 Than the entertainment that yourself allot According to the little means you have.

Burgh. Hereon stands proof apparent of that charge

Which you but now put by, that you design To give your right supposed upon this realm Into the Spaniard's hold; and on that cause Lie now at Rome Allen and Parsons, men Your servants and our traitors.

Mary Stuart. No such proof Lives but by witness of revolted men, My traitors and your helpers; who to me

Have broken their allegiance bound by oath. When being a prisoner clothed about with cares I languished out of hope of liberty, Nor yet saw hope to effect of those things aught Which many and many looked for at my hands, 620 Declining now through age and sickness, this To some seemed good, even for religion's sake, That the succession here of the English crown Should or be stablished in the Spanish king Or in some English Catholic. And a book Was sent to me to avow the Spaniard's claim; Which being of me allowed not, some there were In whose displeasure thence I fell; but now Seeing all my hope in England desperate grown, I am fully minded to reject no aid 630 Abroad, but resolute to receive it.

Walsingham. Sirs

Bethink you, were the kingdom so conveyed, What should become of you and all of yours, Estates and honours and posterities, Being to such hands delivered.

Burgh. Nay, but these 635

In no such wise can be conveyed away
By personal will, but by successive right
Still must descend in heritage of law.
Whereto your own words witness, saying if this
Were blown abroad your cause were utterly
Lost in all hearts of English friends. Therein

Your thoughts hit right: for here in all men's minds

That are not mad with envying at the truth Death were no loathlier than a stranger king. If you would any more, speak: if not aught, 645 This cause is ended.

Mary Stuart. I require again
Before a full and open parliament
Hearing, or speech in person with the queen,
Who shall, I hope, have of a queen regard,
And with the council. So, in trust hereof,
I crave a word with some of you apart,
And of this main assembly take farewell.

END OF THE THIRD ACT.

ACT IV ELIZABETH

ACT IV.

Scene I. — Richmond.

Walsingham and Davison.

Walsingham. It is God's wrath, too sure, that holds her hand;

His plague upon this people, to preserve By her sole mean her deadliest enemy, known By proof more potent than approof of law In all points guilty, but on more than all Toward all this country dangerous. To take off From the court held last month at Fotheringay Authority with so full commission given To pass upon her judgment - suddenly Cut short by message of some three lines writ 10 With hurrying hand at midnight, and despatched To main its work upon the second day, What else may this be in so wise a queen But madness, as a brand to sear the brain Of one by God infatuate? yea, and now 15 That she receives the French ambassador With one more special envoy from his king, Except their message touch her spleen with fire And so undo itself, we cannot tell What doubt may work upon her. Had we but Some sign more evident of some private seal

Confirming toward her by more personal proof
The Scottish queen's inveteracy, for this
As for our country plucked from imminent death
We might thank God: but with such gracious words

Of piteous challenge and imperial plea She hath wrought by letter on our mistress' mind, We may not think her judgment so could slip, Borne down with passion or forgetfulness, As to leave bare her bitter root of heart And core of evil will there labouring.

Davison. Yet

I see no shade of other surety cast
From any sign of likelihood. It were Not shameful more than dangerous, though she bade,

To have her prisoner privily made away;
Yet stands the queen's heart wellnigh fixed hereon
When aught may seem to fix it; then as fast
Wavers, but veers to that bad point again
Whence blowing the wind blows down her honour, nor

Brings surety of life with fame's destruction.

Wal.

Ay, 40

We are no Catholic keepers, and his charge Need fear no poison in our watch-dog's fang, Though he show honest teeth at her, to threat Thieves' hands with loyal danger.

55

Enter Queen Elizabeth, attended by Burghley, Leicester, Hunsdon, Hatton, and others of the Council.

Elizabeth.

No, my lords, We are not so weak of wit as men that need Be counselled of their enemies. Blame us not That we accuse your friendship on this cause Of too much fearfulness: France we will hear, Nor doubt but France shall hear us all as loud As friend or foe may threaten or protest, Of our own heart advised, and resolute more Than hearts that need men's counsel. Bid themin.

Enter Châteauneuf and Bellièvre, attended.

From our fair cousin of France what message, sirs?

Bellièvre. I, madam, have in special charge to lay

The king's mind open to your majesty,
Which gives my tongue first leave of speech more free

Than from a common envoy. Sure it is,
No man more grieves at what his heart abhors,
The counsels of your highness' enemies,
Than doth the king of France: wherein how far 60
The queen your prisoner have borne part, or may Seem of their works partaker, he can judge
Nought: but much less the king may understand
What men may stand accusers, who rise up
Judge in so great a matter. Men of law
65

May lay their charges on a subject : but The queen of Scotland, dowager queen of France, And sister made by wedlock to the king, To none being subject, can be judged of none Without such violence done on rule as breaks 70 Prerogative of princes. Nor may man That looks upon your present majesty In such clear wise apparent, and retains Remembrance of your name through all the world For virtuous wisdom, bring his mind to think 75 That England's royal-souled Elizabeth, Being set so high in fame, can so forget Wise Plato's word, that common souls are wrought

Out of dull iron and slow lead, but kings
Of gold untempered with so vile alloy
As makes all metal up of meaner men.
But say this were not thus, and all men's awe
Were from all time toward kingship merely vain,
And state no more worth reverence, yet the plea
Were nought which here your ministers pretend,
That while the queen of Scots lives you may live
No day that knows not danger. Were she dead,
Rather might then your peril wax indeed
To shape and sense of heavier portent, whom
The Catholic states now threat not, nor your land,
For this queen's love, but rather for their faith's,
Whose cause, were she by violent hand removed,

Could be but furthered, and its enterprise Put on more strong and prosperous pretext; yea, You shall but draw the invasion on this land 95 Whose threat you so may think to stay, and bring Imminence down of inroad. Thus far forth The queen of Scots hath for your person been Even as a targe or buckler which has caught All intercepted shafts against your state 100 Shot, or a stone held fast within your hand, Which, if you cast it thence in fear or wrath To smite your adversary, is cast away, And no mean left therein for menace. If You lay but hand upon her life, albeit There were that counselled this, her death will make

Your enemies weapons of their own despair
And give their whetted wrath excuse and edge
More plausibly to strike more perilously.
Your grace is known for strong in foresight: we 110
These nineteen years of your wise reign have kept

Fast watch in France upon you: of those claims
Which lineally this queen here prisoner may Put forth on your succession have you made
The stoutest rampire of your rule: and this
Is grown a byword with us, that their cause
Who shift the base whereon their policies lean
Bows down toward ruin: and of loyal heart

This will I tell you, madam, which hath been Given me for truth assured of one whose place 120 Affirms him honourable, how openly A certain prince's minister that well May stand in your suspicion says abroad That for his master's greatness it were good The queen of Scots were lost already, seeing 125 He is well assured the Catholics here should then All wholly range them on his master's part. Thus long hath reigned your highness happily, Who have loved fair temperance more than violence: now,

While honour bids have mercy, wisdom holds
Equal at least the scales of interest. Think What name shall yours be found in time far hence,

Even as you deal with her that in your hand Lies not more subject than your fame to come In men's repute that shall be. Bid her live, And ever shall my lord stand bound to you And you for ever firm in praise of men.

Eliz. I am sorry, sir, you are hither come from France

Upon no better errand. I appeal
To God for judge between my cause and hers 140
Whom here you stand for. In this realm of mine
The queen of Scots sought shelter, and therein
Hath never found but kindness; for which grace

In recompense she hath three times sought my life.

No grief that on this head yet ever fell 145 Shook ever from mine eyes so many a tear As this last plot upon it. I have read As deep I doubt me in as many books As any queen or prince in Christendom, Yet never chanced on aught so strange and sad 150 As this my state's calamity. Mine own life Is by mere nature precious to myself, And in mine own realm I can live not safe. I am a poor lone woman, girt about With secret enemies that perpetually 155 Lay wait for me to kill me. From your king Why have not I my traitor to my hands Delivered up, who now this second time Hath sought to slay me, Morgan? On my part, Had mine own cousin Hunsdon here conspired 160 Against the French king's life, he had found not so Refuge of me, nor even for kindred's sake From the edge of law protection: and this cause Needs present evidence of this man's mouth.

Bell. Madam, there stand against the queen of Scots

Already here in England on this charge So many and they so dangerous witnesses No need can be to bring one over more: Nor can the king show such unnatural heart As to send hither a knife for enemies' hands 170 To cut his sister's throat. Most earnestly My lord expects your resolution: which If we receive as given against his plea, I must crave leave to part for Paris hence. Yet give me pardon first if yet once more 175 I pray your highness be assured, and so Take heed in season, you shall find this queen More dangerous dead than living. Spare her life, And not my lord alone but all that reign Shall be your sureties in all Christian lands 180 Against all scathe of all conspiracies Made on her party: while such remedies' ends As physic states with bloodshedding, to cure Danger by death, bring fresh calamities Far oftener forth than the old are healed of them 185 Which so men thought to medicine. To refrain From that red-handed way of rule, and set Justice no higher than mercy sits beside, Is the first mean of kings' prosperity That would reign long: nor will my lord believe 190 Your highness could put off yourself so much As to reverse and tread upon the law That you thus long have kept and honourably: But should this perilous purpose hold right on, I am bounden by my charge to say, the king 195 Will not regard as liable to your laws

A queen's imperial person, nor will hold Her death as but the general wrong of kings And no more his than as his brethren's all, But as his own and special injury done, More than to these injurious.

Eliz. Doth your lord

Bid you speak thus?

Bell. Ay, madam: from his mouth

Had I command what speech to use.

Eliz. You have done

Better to speak than he to send it. Sir, You shall not presently depart this land

As one denied of mere discourtesy.

I will return an envoy of mine own

To speak for me at Paris with the king. You shall bear back a letter from my hand,

And give your lord assurance, having seen,

I cannot be so frighted with men's threats

That they shall not much rather move my mind To quicken than to slack the righteous doom

Which none must think by menace to put back,

Or daunt it with defiance. Sirs, good day.

Exeunt Ambassadors.

I were as one belated with false lights
If I should think to steer my darkling way
By twilight furtherance of their wiles and words.
Think you, my lords, France yet would have her live?

Burghley. If there be other than the apparent end 220

Hid in this mission to your majesty, Mine envoys can by no means fathom it, Who deal for me at Paris: fear of Spain Lays double hand as 't were upon the king, Lest by removal of the queen of Scots 225 A way be made for peril in the claim More potent then of Philip; and if there come From his Farnese note of enterprise Or danger this way tending, France will yet Cleave to your friendship though his sister die. 230 Eliz. So, in your mind, this half-souled brother would

Steer any way that might keep safe his sail Against a southern wind, which here, he thinks, Her death might strengthen from the north again To blow against him off our subject straits, Made servile then and Spanish? Yet perchance There swells behind our seas a heart too high To bow more easily down, and bring this land More humbly to such handling, than their waves Bow down to ships of strangers, or their storms 240 To breath of any lord on earth but God.

What thinks our cousin?

That if Spain or France Hunsdon. Or both be stronger than the heart in us Which beats to battle ere they menace, why,

In God's name, let them rise and make their prey 245 Of what was England: but if neither be, The smooth-cheeked French man-harlot, nor that hand

Which holp to light Rome's fires with English limbs,

Let us not keep to make their weakness strong
A pestilence here alive in England, which Gives force to their faint enmities, and burns
Half the heart out of loyal trust and hope
With heat that kindles treason.

Eliz. By this light,
I have heard worse counsel from a wise man's tongue

Than this clear note of forthright soldiership. 255

How say you, Dudley, to it?

Leicester. Madam, ere this
You have had my mind upon the matter, writ
But late from Holland, that no public stroke
Should fall upon this princess, who may be
By privy death more happily removed Without impeach of majesty, nor leave
A sign against your judgment, to call down Blame of strange kings for wrong to kingship
wrought

Though right were done to justice.

Eliz. Of your love We know it is that comes this counsel; nor, 265

285

Had we such friends of all our servants, need Our mind be now distraught with dangerous doubts

That find no screen from dangers. Yet meseems One doubt stands now removed, if doubt there were

Of aught from Scotland ever: Walsingham, You should have there intelligence whereof To make these lords with us partakers.

Wal. Nay,

Madam, no more than from a trustless hand
Protest and promise: of those twain that come
Hot on these Frenchmen's heels in embassy,
He that in counsel on this cause was late
One with my lord of Leicester now, to rid
By draught of secret death this queen away,
Bears charge to say as these gone hence have said
In open audience, but by personal note
Hath given me this to know, that howsoe'er
His king indeed desire her life be spared Much may be wrought upon him, would your grace

More richly line his ragged wants with gold And by full utterance of your parliament Approve him heir in England.

Eliz. Ay! no more? God's blood! what grace is proffered us at need, And on what mild conditions! Say I will not Redeem such perils at so dear a price,

Shall not our pensioner too join hands with France 290
And pay my gold with iron barter back
At edge of sword he dares not look upon,
They tell us, for the scathe and scare he took
Even in this woman's womb when shot and steel
Undid the manhood in his veins unborn 295
And left his tongue's threats handless?

Wal.

Men there be

Your majesty must think, who bear but ill,
For pride of country and high-heartedness,
To see the king they serve your servant so
That not his mother's life and once their queen's 300
Being at such point of peril can enforce
One warlike word of his for chance of war
Conditional against you. Word came late
From Edinburgh that there the citizens
With hoot and hiss had bayed him through the streets

As he went heartless by; of whom they had heard This published saying, that in his personal mind The blood of kindred or affinity
So much not binds us as the friendship pledged
To them that are not of our blood: and this 310
Stands clear for certain, that no breath of war
Shall breathe from him against us though she die,
Except his titular claim be reft from him
On our succession: and that all his mind

Is but to reign unpartnered with a power
Which should weigh down that half his kingdom's weight

Left to his hand's share nominally in hold:
And for his mother, this would he desire,
That she were kept from this day to her death
Close prisoner in one chamber, never more
To speak with man or woman: and hereon
That proclamation should be made of her
As of one subject formally declared
To the English law whereby, if she offend
Again with iterance of conspiracy,
She shall not as a queen again be tried,
But as your vassal and a private head
Live liable to the doom and stroke of death.

Eliz. She is bounden to him as he long since to her,

Who would have given his kingdom up at least a To his dead father's slayer, in whose red hand How safe had lain his life too doubt may guess, Which yet kept dark her purpose then on him, Dark now no more to usward. Think you then That they belie him, whose suspicion saith His ear and heart are yet inclined to Spain, If from that brother-in-law that was of ours And would have been our bridegroom he may win Help of strange gold and foreign soldiership, With Scottish furtherance of those Catholic lords:

Who are stronger-spirited in their faith than ours, Being harried more of heretics, as they say, Than these within our borders, to root out The creed there stablished now, and do to death Its ministers, with all the lords their friends, 345 Lay hands on all strong places there, and rule As prince upon their party? since he fain From ours would be divided, and cast in His lot with Rome against us too, from these Might he but earn assurance of their faith, 350 Revolting from his own. May these things be More than mere muttering breath of trustless lies, And half his heart yet hover toward our side For all such hope or purpose?

Of his heart Wal.We know not, madam, surely; nor doth he 355 Who follows fast on their first envoy sent, And writes to excuse him of his message here On her behalf apparent, but in sooth Aimed otherwise; the Master I mean of Gray, Who swears me here by letter, if he be not 360 True to the queen of England, he is content To have his head fall on a scaffold: saying, To put from him this charge of embassy Had been his ruin, but the meaning of it Is modest and not menacing: whereto 365 If you will yield not yet to spare the life

So near its forfeit now, he thinks it well

You should be pleased by some commission given To stay by the way his comrade and himself, Or bid them back.

Eliz. What man is this then, sent

With such a knave to fellow?

Wal. No such knave, But still your prisoner's friend of old time found: Sir Robert Melville.

Eliz. And an honest man
As faith might wish her servants: but what pledge
Will these produce me for security
That I may spare this dangerous life and live
Unscathed of after practice?

Wal. As I think,
The king's self and his whole nobility
Will be her personal pledges; and her son,
If England yield her to his hand in charge,
On no less strait a bond will undertake
For her safe keeping.

Eliz. That were even to arm With double power mine adversary, and make him The stronger by my hand to do me hurt — Were he mine adversary indeed: which yet I will not hold him. Let them find a mean For me to live unhurt and save her life, It shall well please me. Say this king of Scots Himself would give his own inheritance up Pretended in succession, if but once

Her hand were found or any friend's of hers
Again put forth upon me for her sake,
Why, haply so might hearts be satisfied
Of lords and commons then to let her live.
But this I doubt he had rather take her life
Himself than yield up to us for pledge: and less,
These men shall know of me, I will not take
In price of her redemption: which were else,
And haply may in no wise not be held,
To this my loyal land and mine own trust
A deadlier stroke and blast of sound more dire
Than noise of fleets invasive.

Wal.

Surely so

Would all hearts hold it, madam, in that land

That are not enemies of the land and yours;

For ere the doom had been proclaimed an hour 405

Which gave to death your main foe's head and theirs

Yourself have heard what fire of joy brake forth From all your people: how their church-towers all Rang in with jubilant acclaim of bells

The day that bore such tidings, and the night

That laughed aloud with lightning of their joy

And thundered round its triumph: twice twelve

This tempest of thanksgiving roared and shone Sheer from the Solway's to the Channel's foam With light as from one festal-flaming hearth 41 And sound as of one trumpet: not a tongue But praised God for it, or heart that leapt not up, Save of your traitors and their country's: these Withered at heart and shrank their heads in close, As though the bright sun's were a basilisk's eye,4 And light, that gave all others comfort, flame And smoke to theirs of hell's own darkness, whence Such eyes were blinded or put out with fire.

Eliz. Yea, I myself, I mind me, might not sleep Those twice twelve hours thou speak'st of. By God's light,

Be it most in love of me or fear of her
I know not, but my people seems in sooth
Hot and an hungered on this trail of hers:
Nor is it a people bloody-minded, used
To lap the life up of an enemy's vein
Who bleeds to death unweaponed: our good hounds

Will course a quarry soldierlike in war, But rage not hangmanlike upon the prey, To flesh their fangs on limbs that strive not: yet Their hearts are hotter on this course than mine, Which most was deadliest aimed at.

Wal. Even for that How should not theirs be hot as fire from hell To burn your danger up and slay that soul Alive that seeks it? Thinks your majesty There beats a heart where treason hath not turned

All English blood to poison, which would feel
No deadlier pang of dread more deathful to it
To hear of yours endangered than to feel
A sword against its own life bent, or know
Death imminent as darkness overhead
That takes the noon from one man's darkening eye

As must your death from all this people's? You Are very England: in your light of life This living land of yours walks only safe, And all this breathing people with your breath 450 Breathes unenslaved, and draws at each pulse in Freedom: your eye is light of theirs, your word As God's to comfort England, whose whole soul Is made with yours one, and her witness you That Rome or hell shall take not hold on her 455 Again till God be wroth with us so much As to reclaim for heaven the star that yet Lights all your land that looks on it, and gives Assurance higher than danger dares assail Save in this lady's name and service, who Must now from you take judgment.

Eliz. Must! by God, I know not must but as a word of mine, My tongue's and not mine ear's familiar. Sirs, Content yourselves to know this much of us, Or having known remember, that we sent

The Lord of Buckhurst and our servant Beale

To acquaint this queen our prisoner with the doom

Confirmed on second trial against her, saying Her word can weigh not down the weightier guilt Approved upon her, and by parliament Since fortified with sentence. Yea, my lords, Ye should forget not how by message then I bade her know of me with what strong force Of strenuous and invincible argument I am urged to hold no more in such delay The process of her execution, being The seed-plot of these late conspiracies, Their author and chief motive: and am told That if I yield not mine the guilt must be In God's and in the whole world's suffering sight. Of all the miseries and calamities To ensue on my refusal: whence, albeit I know not yet how God shall please to incline My heart on that behalf, I have thought it meet In conscience yet that she should be forewarned, That so she might bethink her of her sins Done both toward God offensive and to me And pray for grace to be true penitent For all these faults: which, had the main fault reached

No further than mine own poor person, God Stands witness with what truth my heart protests I freely would have pardoned. She to this Makes bitter answer as of desperate heart
All we may wreak our worst upon her; whom Having to death condemned, we may fulfil
Our wicked work, and God in Paradise
With just atonement shall requite her. This Ye see is all the pardon she will ask,
Being only, and even as 't were with prayer, desired

To crave of us forgiveness: and thereon 500 Being by Lord Buckhurst charged on this point home

That by her mean the Catholics here had learnt To hold her for their sovereign, on which cause Nor my religion nor myself might live Uncharged with danger while her life should last, 505 She answering gives God thanks aloud to be Held of so great account upon his side, And in God's cause and in the church of God's Rejoicingly makes offering of her life; Which I, God knows how unrejoicingly, 510 Can scarce, ye tell me, choose but take, or yield At least for you to take it. Yet, being told It is not for religion she must die, But for a plot by compass of her own Laid to dethrone me and destroy, she casts 515 Again this answer barbed with mockery back, She was not so presumptuous born, to aspire

To two such ends yet ever: yea, so far She dwelt from such desire removed in heart, She would not have me suffer by her will The fillip of a finger: though herself Be persecuted even as David once And her mishap be that she cannot so Fly by the window forth as David: whence It seems she likens us to Saul, and looks Haply to see us as on Mount Gilboa fallen, Where yet, for all the shooters on her side, Our shield shall be not vilely cast away, As of one unanointed. Yet, my lords, If England might but by my death attain A state more flourishing with a better prince, Gladly would I lay down my life; who have No care save only for my people's sake To keep it: for myself, in all the world I see no great cause why for all this coil I should be fond to live or fear to die. If I should say unto you that I mean To grant not your petition, by my faith, More should I so say haply than I mean: Or should I say I mean to grant it, this Were, as I think, to tell you of my mind More than is fit for you to know: and thus I must for all petitionary prayer Deliver you an answer answerless. Yet will I pray God lighten my dark mind

That being illumined it may thence foresee What for his church and all this commonwealth May most be profitable: and this once known, My hand shall halt not long behind his will.

Scene II. - Fotheringay.

Sir Amyas Paulet and Sir Drew Drury.

Paulet. I never gave God heartier thanks than these

I give to have you partner of my charge Now most of all, these letters being to you No less designed than me, and you in heart One with mine own upon them. Certainly, When I put hand to pen this morning past That Master Davison by mine evidence Might note what sore disquietudes I had To increase my griefs before of body and mind, I looked for no such word to cut off mine TO As these to us both of Walsingham's and his. Would rather yet I had cause to still complain Of those unanswered letters two months past Than thus be certified of such intents As God best knoweth I never sought to know, 15 Or search out secret causes: though to hear Nothing at all did breed, as I confessed, In me some hard conceits against myself, I had rather yet rest ignorant than ashamed

Of such ungracious knowledge. This shall be Fruit as I think of dread wrought on the queen By those seditious rumours whose report Blows fear among the people lest our charge Escape our trust, or as they term it now Be taken away, — such apprehensive tongues So phrase it, — and her freedom strike men's hearts

More deep than all these flying fears that say London is fired of Papists, or the Scots Have crossed in arms the Border, or the north Is risen again rebellious, or the Guise Is disembarked in Sussex, or that now In Milford Haven rides a Spanish fleet — All which, albeit but footless floating lies, May all too easily smite and work too far Even on the heart most royal in the world That ever was a woman's.

Drury. Good my friend,
These noises come without a thunderbolt
In such dense air of dusk expectancy
As all this land lies under; nor will some Doubt or think much to say of those reports
They are broached and vented of men's credulous mouths

Whose ears have caught them from such lips as meant

Merely to strike more terror in the queen

65

And wring that warrant from her hovering hand Which falters yet and flutters on her lip While the hand hangs and trembles half advanced

Upon that sentence which, the treasurer said, Should well ere this have spoken, seeing it was More than a full month old and four days more When he so looked to hear the word of it Which yet lies sealed of silence.

Paul. Will you say,

Or any as wise and loyal, say or think
It was but for a show, to scare men's wits,
They have raised this hue and cry upon her flight
Supposed from hence, to waken Exeter
55
With noise from Honiton and Sampfield spread
Of proclamation to detain all ships
And lay all highways for her day and night,
And send like precepts out four manner of ways
From town to town, to make in readiness
Their armour and artillery, with all speed,
On pain of death, for London by report
Was set on fire? though, God be therefore praised,

We know this is not, yet the noise hereof Were surely not to be neglected, seeing There is, meseems, indeed no readier way To levy forces for the achieving that Which so these lewd reporters feign to fear. Drury. Why, in such mighty matters and such mists

Wise men may think what hardly fools would say,
And eyes get glimpse of more than sight hath leave

To give commission for the babbling tongue Aloud to cry they have seen. This noise that was Upon one Arden's flight, a traitor, whence Fear flew last week all round us, gave but note How lightly may men's minds take fire, and words Take wing that have no feet to fare upon More solid than a shadow.

Paul.

Nay, he was
Escaped indeed: and every day thus brings Forth its new mischief: as this last month did
Those treasons of the French ambassador
Designed against our mistress, which God's grace Laid by the knave's mean bare to whom they sought

For one to slay her, and of the Pope's hand earn Ten thousand blood-encrusted crowns a year To his most hellish hire. You will not say This too was merely fraud or vision wrought By fear or cloudy falsehood?

Drury. I will say
No more or surelier than I know: and this

I know not thoroughly to the core of truth Or heart of falsehood in it. A man may lie Merely, or trim some bald lean truth with lies, Or patch bare falsehood with some tatter of truth, And each of these pass current: but of these Which likeliest may this man's tale be who gave 95 Word of his own temptation by these French To hire them such a murderer, and avowed He held it godly cunning to comply And bring this envoy's secretary to sight Of one clapped up for debts in Newgate, who 100 Being thence released might readily, as he said, Even by such means as once this lady's lord Was made away with, make the queen away With powder fired beneath her bed - why, this, Good sooth, I guess not; but I doubt the man 105 To be more liar than fool, and yet, God wot, More fool than traitor; most of all intent To conjure coin forth of the Frenchman's purse With tricks of mere effrontery: thus at least We know did Walsingham esteem of him: IIO And if by Davison held of more account, Or merely found more serviceable, and made A mean to tether up those quick French tongues From threat or pleading for this prisoner's life, I cannot tell, and care not. Though the queen 115 Hath stayed this envoy's secretary from flight Forth of the kingdom, and committed him To ward within the Tower while Châteauneuf Himself should come before a council held

At my lord treasurer's, where being thus accused:
At first he cared not to confront the man,
But stood upon his office, and the charge
Of his king's honour and prerogative —
Then bade bring forth the knave, who being brought forth

Outfaced him with insistence front to front
And took the record of this whole tale's truth
Upon his soul's damnation, challenging
The Frenchman's answer in denial hereof,
That of his own mouth had this witness been Traitorously tempted, and by personal plea
Directly drawn to treason: which awhile Struck dumb the ambassador as amazed with wrath,

Till presently, the accuser being removed,
He made avowal this fellow some while since
Had given his secretary to wit there lay
One bound in Newgate who being thence released
Would take the queen's death on his hand:
whereto

Answering, he bade the knave avoid his house On pain, if once their ways should cross, to be Sent bound before the council: who replied He had done foul wrong to take no further note, But being made privy to this damned device Keep close its perilous knowledge; whence the queen

Might well complain against him; and hereon
They fell to wrangling on this cause, that he Professed himself to no man answerable
For declaration or for secret held
Save his own master: so that now is gone
Sir William Wade to Paris, not with charge
To let the king there know this queen shall live, 150
But to require the ambassador's recall
And swift delivery of our traitors there
To present justice: yet may no man say,
For all these half-faced scares and policies,
Here was more sooth than seeming.

Why, these crafts 155 Paul. Were shameful then as fear's most shameful self, If thus your wit read them aright; and we Should for our souls and lives alike do ill To jeopard them on such men's surety given As make no more account of simple faith Than true men make of liars: and these are they, Our friends and masters, that rebuke us both By speech late uttered of her majesty For lack of zeal in service and of care She looked for at our hands, in that we have not 165 In all this time, unprompted, of ourselves Found out some way to cut this queen's life off, Seeing how great peril, while her enemy lives, She is hourly subject unto: saying, she notes, Besides a kind of lack of love to her, 170

Herein we have not that particular care Forsooth of our own safeties, or indeed Of the faith rather and the general good, That politic reason bids; especially, Having so strong a warrant and such ground For satisfaction of our consciences To Godward, and discharge of credit kept And reputation toward the world, as is That oath whereby we stand associated To prosecute inexorably to death Both with our joint and our particular force All by whose hand and all on whose behalf Our sovereign's life is struck at: as by proof Stands charged upon our prisoner. So they write, As though the queen's own will had warranted The words that by her will's authority Were blotted from the bond, whereby that head Was doomed on whose behoof her life should be By treason threatened: for she would not have Aught pass which grieved her subjects' consciences,

She said, or might abide not openly
The whole world's view: nor would she any one
Were punished for another's fault: and so
Cut off the plea whereon she now desires
That we should dip our secret hands in blood
With no direction given of her own mouth
So to pursue that dangerous head to death

By whose assent her life were sought: for this Stands fixed for only warrant of such deed, And this we have not, but her word instead 200 She takes it most unkindly toward herself That men professing toward her loyally That love that we do should in any sort, For lack of our own duty's full discharge, Cast upon her the burden, knowing as we 205 Her slowness to shed blood, much more of one So near herself in blood as is this queen, And one with her in sex and quality. And these respects, they find, or so profess, Do greatly trouble her: who hath sundry times 210 Protested, they assure us, earnestly, That if regard of her good subjects' risk Did not more move her than the personal fear Of proper peril to her, she never would Be drawn to assent unto this bloodshedding: And so to our good judgments they refer These speeches they thought meet to acquaint us with

As passed but lately from her majesty,
And to God's guard commend us: which God knows

We should much more need than deserve of him 220 Should we give ear to this, and as they bid Make heretics of these papers; which three times You see how Davison hath enforced on us:

But they shall taste no fire for me, nor pass Back to his hands till copies writ of them Lie safe in mine for sons of mine to keep In witness how their father dealt herein.

Drury. You have done the wiselier: and what word soe'er

Shall bid them know your mind, I am well assured

It well may speak for me too.

Paul. Thus it shall: That having here his letters in my hands, I would not fail, according to his charge, To send back answer with all possible speed Which shall deliver unto him my great grief And bitterness of mind, in that I am So much unhappy as I hold myself To have lived to look on this unhappy day, When I by plain direction am required From my most gracious sovereign's mouth to do An act which God forbiddeth, and the law. Hers are my goods and livings, and my life, Held at her disposition, and myself Am ready so to lose them this next day If it shall please her so, acknowledging I hold them of her mere goodwill, and do not Desire them to enjoy them but so long As her great grace gives leave: but God forbid That I should make for any grace of hers

So foul a shipwreck of my conscience, or Leave ever to my poor posterity

So great a blot, as privily to shed blood
With neither law nor warrant. So, in trust
That she, of her accustomed clemency,
Will take my dutiful answer in good part,
By his good mediation, as returned

From one who never will be less in love,
Honour, obedience, duty to his queen,
Than any Christian subject living, thus
To God's grace I commit him.

Drury.

Though I doubt

Drury. Though I doubt
She haply shall be much more wroth hereat 260
Than lately she was gracious, when she bade
God treblefold reward you for your charge
So well discharged, saluting you by name
Most faithful and most careful, you shall do
Most like a wise man loyally to write 265
But such good words as these, whereto myself
Subscribe in heart: though being not named herein

(Albeit to both seem these late letters meant)
Nor this directed to me, I forbear
To make particular answer. And indeed,
Were danger less apparent in her life
To the heart's life of all this living land,
I would this woman might not die at all
By secret stroke nor open sentence.

Paul.

ACT IV.

Will praise God's mercy most for this of all, When I shall see the murderous cause removed Of its most mortal peril: nor desire A guerdon ampler from the queen we serve, Besides her commendations of my faith For spotless actions and for safe regards, Than to see judgment on her enemy done; Which were for me that recompense indeed Whereof she writes as one not given to all, But for such merit reserved to crown its claim Above all common service: nor save this Could any treasure's promise in the world So ease those travails and rejoice this heart That hers too much takes thought of, as to read Her charge to carry for her sake in it This most just thought, that she can balance not a The value that her grace doth prize me at In any weight of judgment: yet it were A word to me more comfortable at heart Than these, though these most gracious, that should speak

Death to her death's contriver.

Drury. Nay, myself Were fain to see this coil wound up, and her Removed that makes it: yet such things will pluck

Hard at men's hearts that think on them, and move

Compassion that such long strange years should find

So strange an end: nor shall men ever say 300 But she was born right royal; full of sins, It may be, and by circumstance or choice Dyed and defaced with bloody stains and black, Unmerciful, unfaithful, but of heart So fiery high, so swift of spirit and clear, 305 In extreme danger and pain so lifted up, So of all violent things inviolable, So large of courage, so superb of soul, So sheathed with iron mind invincible And arms unbreached of fireproof constancy - 310 By shame not shaken, fear or force or death, Change, or all confluence of calamities — And so at her worst need beloved, and still, Naked of help and honour when she seemed, As other women would be, and of hope 315 Stripped, still so of herself adorable By minds not always all ignobly mad Nor all made poisonous with false grain of faith, She shall be a world's wonder to all time, A deadly glory watched of marvelling men 320 Not without praise, not without noble tears, And if without what she would never have Who had it never, pity — yet from none Quite without reverence and some kind of love For that which was so royal. Yea, and now 325 That at her prayer we here attend on her, If, as I think, she have in mind to send Aught written to the queen, what we may do To further her desire shall on my part Gladly be done, so be it the grace she craves Be nought akin to danger.

Paul. It shall be
The first of all then craved by her of man,
Or by man's service done her, that was found
So harmless ever.

Enter Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton.

Mary Stuart. Sirs, in time past by
I was desirous many times, ye know,
To have written to your queen: but since I have

Advertisement of my conviction, seeing
I may not look for life, my soul is set
On preparation for another world:
Yet none the less, not for desire of life,
But for my conscience's discharge and rest,
And for my last farewell, I have at heart
By you to send her a memorial writ
Of somewhat that concerns myself, when I Shall presently be gone out of this world.
And to remove from her, if such be there,
Suspicion of all danger in receipt
Of this poor paper that should come from me,
Myself will take the assay of it, and so
With mine own hands to yours deliver it.

Paul. Will you not also, madam, be content To seal and close it in my presence up?

Mary Stuart. Sir, willingly: but I beseech your word Pledged for its safe delivery to the queen.

Paul. I plight my faith it shall be sent to her. 355 Mary Stuart. This further promise I desire, you will Procure me from above certificate

It hath been there delivered.

This is more Drury. Than we may stand so pledged for: in our power It is to send, but far beyond our power, 360 As being above our place, to promise you Certificate or warrant.

Mary Stuart. Yet I trust Consideration may be had of me After my death, as one derived in blood From your queen's grandsire, with all mortal rites 365 According with that faith I have professed All my life-days as I was born therein. This is the sum of all mine askings: whence Well might I take it in ill part of you To wish me seal my letter in your sight, 370 Bewraying your hard opinion of me. This Paul.

Your own words well might put into my mind, That so beside my expectation made

Proffer to take my first assay for me
Of the outer part of it: for you must think
I was not ignorant that by sleight of craft
There might be as great danger so conveyed Within the letter as without, and thus
I could not for ill thoughts of you be blamed,
Concurring with you in this jealousy:
For had yourself not moved it of yourself
Sir Drew nor I had ever thought on it.

Mary Stuart. The occasion why I moved it was but this,

That having made my custom in time past
To send sometimes some tokens to your queen,
At one such time that I sent certain clothes
One standing by advised her cause my gifts
To be tried thoroughly ere she touched them;
which

I have since observed, and taken order thus With Nau, when last he tarried at the court, To do the like to a fur-fringed counterpane Which at that time I sent: and as for this, Look what great danger lies between these leaves That I dare take and handle in my hands, And press against my face each part of them Held open thus, and either deadly side, Wherein your fear smells death sown privily.

Paul. Madam, when so you charged your secretary

Her majesty was far from doubt, I think, Or dream of such foul dealing: and I would 400 Suspicion since had found no just cause given, And then things had not been as now they are.

Mary Stuart. But things are as they are, and here I stand

Convicted, and not knowing how many hours

I have to live yet.

Paul. Madam, you shall live 405
As many hours as God shall please: but this May be said truly, that you here have been Convicted in most honourable sort
And favourable.

Mary Stuart. What favour have I found?

Paul. Your cause hath been examined scrupulously

By many our eldest nobles of this realm,
Whereas by law you should but have been tried
By twelve men as a common person.

Mary Stuart. Nay,

Your noblemen must by their peers be tried.

Paul. All strangers of what quality soe'er
In matter of crime are only to be tried
In other princes' territories by law
That in that realm bears rule.

Mary Stuart. You have your laws:
But other princes all will think of it
As they see cause; and mine own son is now 420

No more a child, but come to man's estate, And he will think of these things bitterly.

Drury. Ingratitude, whate'er he think of them, Is odious to all persons, but of all In mightiest personages most specially Most hateful; and it will not be denied But that the queen's grace greatly hath deserved Both of yourself and of your son.

Mary Stuart. What boon Shall I acknowledge? Being in bonds, I am set Free from the world, and therefore am I not Afraid to speak; I have had the favour here To have been kept prisoner now these many years

Against my will and justice.

Paul. Madam, this

Was a great favour, and without this grace You had not lived to see these days.

Mary Stuart. How so?

Paul. Seeing your own subjects did pursue you, and had

The best in your own country.

Mary Stuart. That is true, Because your Mildmay's ill persuasions first Made me discharge my forces, and then caused Mine enemies to burn my friends' main holds, a Castles and houses.

Paul. Howsoe'er, it was

By great men of that country that the queen Had earnest suit made to her to have yourself Delivered to them, which her grace denied, And to their great misliking.

Drury. Seventeen years 44
She hath kept your life to save it: and whereas
She calls your highness sister, she hath dealt
In truth and deed most graciously with you
And sisterlike, in seeking to preserve
Your life at once and honour.

Mary Stuart. Ay! wherein? 450 Drury. In that commission of your causes held

At York, which was at instance of your friends Dissolved to save your honour.

Mary Stuart. No: the cause
Why that commission was dissolved indeed
Was that my friends could not be heard to inform 455

Against my loud accusers.

Paul.

But your friend
The bishop's self of Ross, your very friend,
Hath written that this meeting was dismissed
All only in your favour: and his book
Is extant: and this favour is but one
Of many graces which her majesty
Hath for mere love extended to you.

Mary Stuart.

This

Is one great favour, even to have kept me here So many years against my will.

Paul. It was

For your own safety, seeing your countrymen Sought your destruction, and to that swift end Required to have you yielded up to them, As was before said.

Mary Stuart. Nay, then, I will speak. I am not afraid. It was determined here That I should not depart: and when I was Demanded by my subjects, this I know, That my lord treasurer with his own close hand Writ in a packet which by trustier hands Was intercepted, and to me conveyed, To the earl of Murray, that the devil was tied Fast in a chain, and they could keep her not, But here she should be safely kept.

Drury. That earl

Was even as honourable a gentleman As I knew ever in that country bred.

Mary Stuart. One of the worst men of the world he was:

A foul adulterer, one of general lust, A spoiler and a murderer.

Drury. Six weeks long, As I remember, here I saw him; where He bore him very gravely, and maintained The reputation even on all men's tongues

In all things of a noble gentleman: Nor have I heard him evil spoken of Till this time ever.

Mary Stuart. Yea, my rebels here Are honest men, and by the queen have been Maintained.

Paul. You greatly do forget yourself 490 To charge her highness with so foul a fault, Which you can never find ability To prove on her.

Mary Stuart. What did she with the French,

I pray you, at Newhaven?

Paul. It appears You have conceived so hardly of the queen 495 My mistress, that you still inveterately Interpret all her actions to the worst, Not knowing the truth of all the cause: but yet I dare assure you that her majesty Had most just cause and righteous, in respect 500 As well of Calais as for other ends, To do the thing she did, and more to have done Had it so pleased her to put forth her power: And this is in you great unthankfulness After so many favours and so great, 505 Whereof you will acknowledge in no wise The least of any: though her majesty Hath of her own grace merely saved your life, To the utter discontentment of the best

Your subjects once in open parliament Who craved against you justice on the charge Of civil law-breach and rebellion.

Mary Stuart. I

Know no such matter, but full well I know Sir Francis Walsingham hath openly, Since his abiding last in Scotland, said That I should rue his entertainment there.

Paul. Madam, you have not rued it, but have

More honourably entertained than ever yet
Was any other crown's competitor
In any realm save only this: whereof
Some have been kept close prisoners, other some Maimed and unnaturally disfigured, some Murdered.

Mary Stuart. But I was no competitor: All I required was in successive right To be reputed but as next the crown.

Paul. Nay, madam, you went further, when you gave

The English arms and style, as though our queen Had been but an usurper on your right.

Mary Stuart. My husband and my kinsmen did therein

What they thought good: I had nought to do with it.

Paul. Why would you not then loyally renounce

550

Your claim herein pretended, but with such Condition, that you might be authorized Next heir apparent to the crown?

Mary Stuart. I have made

At sundry times thereon good proffers, which 535 Could never be accepted.

Paul. Heretofore

It hath been proved unto you presently That in the very instant even of all Your treaties and most friendlike offers were Some dangerous crafts discovered.

Mary Stuart. You must think 540 I have some friends on earth, and if they have done

Anything privily, what is that to me?

Paul. Madam, it was somewhat to you, and I would

For your own sake you had forborne it, that After advertisement and conscience given Of Morgan's devilish practice, to have killed A sacred queen, you yet would entertain The murderer as your servant.

Mary Stuart. I might do it

With as good right as ever did your queen So entertain my rebels.

Drury. Be advised:
This speech is very hard, and all the case
Here differs greatly.

Mary Stuart. Yea, let this then be; Ye cannot yet of my conviction say But I by partial judgment was condemned, And the commissioners knew my son could have 555 No right, were I convicted, and your queen Could have no children of her womb; whereby They might set up what man for king they would.

Paul. This is in you too great forgetfulness Of honour and yourself, to charge these lords With two so foul and horrible faults, as first To take your life by partial doom from you, And then bestow the kingdom where they liked.

Mary Stuart. Well, all is one to me: and for my part

I thank God I shall die without regret

Of anything that I have done alive.

Paul. I would entreat you yet be sorry at least For the great wrong, and well deserving grief, You have done the queen my mistress.

Mary Stuart. Nay, thereon Let others answer for themselves: I have Nothing to do with it. Have you borne in mind Those matters of my monies that we last Conferred upon together?

Paul. Madam, these

Are not forgotten.

Mary Stuart. Well it is if aught Be yet at all remembered for my good.

575

Have here my letter sealed and superscribed, And so farewell — or even as here men may. Exeunt Paulet and Drury.

Had I that old strength in my weary limbs
That in my heart yet fails not, fain would I Fare forth if not fare better. Tired I am,
But not so lame in spirit I might not take
Some comfort of the winter-wasted sun
This bitter Christmas to me, though my feet
Were now no firmer nor more hopeful found
Than when I went but in my chair abroad
Than when I went but in my chair abroad
And go now without help of either side,
And bend my hand again, thou seest, to write:
I did not well perchance in sight of these
To have made so much of this lame hand, which

yet

God knows was grievous to me, and to-day

To make my letter up and superscribe

And seal it with no outward show of pain

Before their face and inquisition; yet

I care not much in player's wise piteously

To blind such eyes with feigning: though this

Drew

Be gentler and more gracious than his mate And liker to be wrought on; but at last What need have I of men?

Mary Beaton.

What then you may

I know not, seeing for all that was and is
We are yet not at the last; but when you had,
You have hardly failed to find more help of them
And heartier service than more prosperous queens
Exact of expectation: when your need
Was greater than your name or natural state,
And wage was none to look for but of death,
As though the expectancy thereof and hope
Were more than man's prosperities, men have given

Heart's thanks to have this gift of God and you For dear life's guerdon, even the trust assured To drink for you the bitterness of death.

Mary Stuart. Ay, one said once it must be — some one said

I must be perilous ever, and my love
More deadly than my will was evil or good Toward any of all these that through me should die

I know not who, nor when one said it: but I know too sure he lied not.

Mary Beaton. No; I think
This was a seer indeed. I have heard of men
That under imminence of death grew strong
With mortal foresight, yet in life-days past
Could see no foot before them, nor provide
For their own fate or fortune anything
Against one angry chance of accident

Or passionate fault of their own loves or hates That might to death betray them: such an one 625 Thus haply might have prophesied, and had No strength to save himself.

Mary Stuart. I know not: yet

Time was when I remembered.

Mary Beaton. It should be No enemy's saying whom you remember not; You are wont not to forget your enemies; yet 630 The word rang sadder than a friend's should fall Save in some strange pass of the spirit of flesh For love's sake haply hurt to death.

Mary Stuart. It seems Thy mind is bent to know the name of me

That of myself I know not.

Mary Beaton. Nay, my mind 635
Has other thoughts to beat upon: for me
It may suffice to know the saying for true
And never care who said it.

Mary Stuart. True? too sure,
God to mine heart's grief hath approved it. See,
Nor Scot nor Englishman that takes on him
The service of my sorrow but partakes
The sorrow of my service: man by man,
As that one said, they perish of me: yea,
Were I a sword sent upon earth, or plague Bred of aerial poison, I could be 645
No deadlier where unwillingly I strike,

Who where I would can hurt not: Percy died By his own hand in prison, Howard by law, These young men with strange torments done to death,

Who should have rid me and the world of her of That is our scourge, and to the church of God A pestilence that wastes it: all the north Wears yet the scars engraven of civil steel Since its last rising: nay, she saith but right, Mine enemy, saying by these her servile tongues of I have brought upon her land mine own land's curse.

And a sword follows at my heel, and fire Is kindled of mine eyeshot: and before, Whom did I love that died not of it? whom That I would save might I deliver, when I had once but looked on him with love, or pledged Friendship? I should have died I think long since, That many might have died not, and this word Had not been written of me nor fulfilled, But perished in the saying, a prophecy That took the prophet by the throat and slew—As sure I think it slew him. Such a song Might my poor servant slain before my face Have sung before the stroke of violent death Had fallen upon him there for my sake.

Mary Beaton.

Ah!

Mary Beaton. Ah You think so? this remembrance was it not

That hung and hovered in your mind but now,
Moved your heart backward all unwittingly
To some blind memory of the man long dead?

Mary Stuart. In sooth, I think my prophet should have been 675

David.

Mary Beaton. You thought of him?

Mary Stuart. An old sad thought:

The moan of it was made long since, and he

Not unremembered.

Mary Beaton. Nay, of him indeed
Record was made — a royal record: whence
No marvel is it that you forgot not him.
680

Mary Stuart. I would forget no friends nor enemies: these

More needsme now remember. Think's thou not
This woman hates me deadlier — or this queen
That is not woman — than myself could hate
Except I were as she in all things? then
I should love no such woman as am I
Much more than she may love me: yet I am sure,
Or so near surety as all belief may be,
She dare not slay me for her soul's sake: nay,
Though that were made as light of as a leaf
Storm-shaken, in such stormy winds of state
As blow between us like a blast of death,
For her throne's sake she durst not, which must be Broken to build my scaffold. Yet, God wot,

Perchance a straw's weight now cast in by chance 695
Might weigh my life down in the scale her hand
Holds hardly straight for trembling: if she be Woman at all, so tempered naturally
And with such spirit and sense as thou and I,
Should I for wrath so far forget myself
As these men sometime charge me that I do,
My tongue might strike my head off. By this head
That yet I wear to swear by, if life be Thankworthy, God might well be thanked for this

Of me or whoso loves me in the world,
That I spake never half my heart out yet,
For any sore temptation of them all,
To her or hers; nor ever put but once
My heart upon my paper, writing plain
The things I thought, heard, knew for truth of her, 710
Believed or feigned — nay, feigned not to believe
Of her fierce follies fed with wry-mouthed praise,
And that vain ravin of her sexless lust
Which could not feed nor hide its hunger, curb
With patience nor allay with love the thirst
That mocked itself as all mouths mocked it. Ha, What might the reading of these truths have wrought

Within her maiden mind, what seed have sown, Trow'st thou, in her sweet spirit, of revenge Toward me that showed her queenship in the glass 720

730

A subject's hand of hers had put in mine The likeness of it loathed and laughable As they that worshipped it with words and signs Beheld her and bemocked her?

Mary Beaton. Certainly, I think that soul drew never breath alive To whom this letter might seem pardonable Which timely you forbore to send her.

Mary Stuart. Nay,

I doubt not I did well to keep it back—
And did not ill to write it: for God knows

It was no small ease to my heart.

Mary Beaton.

I had not burnt it as you bade me burn,
But kept it privily safe against a need
That I might haply sometime have of it?

Mary Stuart. What, to destroy me?

Mary Beaton. Hardly, sure, to save.

Mary Stuart. Why shouldst thou think to bring me to my death?

Mary Beaton. Indeed, no man am I that love you; nor Need I go therefore in such fear of you

As of my mortal danger.

Mary Stuart. On my life
(Long life or short, with gentle or violent end,
I know not, and would choose not, though I might 74°
So take God's office on me), one that heard

Would swear thy speech had in it, and subtly mixed,

A savour as of menace, or a sound As of an imminent ill or perilous sense Which was not in thy meaning.

Mary Beaton.

No: in mine There lurked no treason ever; nor have you Cause to think worse of me than loyally, If proof may be believed on witness.

Mary Stuart. Sure,

I think I have not nor I should not have: Thy life has been the shadow cast of mine, A present faith to serve my present need, A foot behind my footsteps; as long since In those French dances that we trod, and laughed The blithe way through together. Thou couldst

Then, and a great while gone it is by this Since I heard song or music: I could now Find in my heart to bid thee, as the Jews Were once bid sing in their captivity One of their songs of Sion, sing me now, If one thou knowest, for love of that far time, One of our songs of Paris.

Give me leave Mary Beaton. A little to cast up some wandering words And gather back such memories as may beat

About my mind of such a song, and yet

I think I might renew some note long dumb 765 That once your ear allowed of. — (Aside.) I did pray,

Tempt me not, God: and by her mouth again He tempts me—nay, but prompts me, being most just,

To know by trial if all remembrance be Dead as remorse or pity that in birth
77°
Died, and were childless in her: if she quite Forget that very swan-song of thy love,
My love that wast, my love that wouldst not be,
Let God forget her now at last as I
Remember: if she think but one soft thought, 775
Cast one poor word upon thee, God thereby
Shall surely bid me let her live: if none,
I shoot that letter home and sting her dead.
God strengthen me to sing but these words
through

5 Γhough I fall dumb at end for ever. Now — 780

She sings.

Après tant de jours, après tant de pleurs, Soyez secourable à mon âme en peine. Voyez comme Avril fait l'amour aux fleurs; Dame d'amour, dame aux belles couleurs, Dieu vous a fait belle, Amour vous fait reine.

785

Rions, je t'en prie; aimons, je le veux. Le temps fuit et rit et ne revient guère Pour baiser le bout de tes blonds chéveux, Pour baiser tes cils, ta bouche et tes yeux; L'amour n'a qu'un jour auprès de sa mère.

Mary Stuart. Nay, I should once have known that song, thou say'st,

And him that sang it and should now be dead:

Was it — but his rang sweeter — was it not

Remy Belleau?

Mary Reater (My letter here at heart!)

Mary Beaton. (My letter—here at heart!)

Aside.

I think it might be — were it better writ
And courtlier phrased, with Latin spice cast in,
And a more tunable descant.

Ay; how sweet Mary Stuart. Sang all the world about those stars that sang With Ronsard for the strong mid star of all, His bay-bound head all glorious with grey hairs, 800 Who sang my birth and bridal! When I think Of those French years, I only seem to see A light of swords and singing, only hear Laughter of love and lovely stress of lutes, And in between the passion of them borne Sound of swords crossing ever, as of feet Dancing, and life and death still equally Blithe and bright-eyed from battle. Haply now My sometime sister, mad Queen Madge, is grown As grave as I should be, and wears at waist 810 No hearts of last year's lovers any more Enchased for jewels round her girdlestead, But rather beads for penitence; yet I doubt Time should not more abash her heart than mine,

Who live not heartless yet. These days like those

Have power but for a season given to do
No more upon our spirits than they may,
And what they may we know not till it be Done, and we need no more take thought of it,
As I no more of death or life to-day.

82

Mary Beaton. That shall you surely need not.

Mary Stuart. So I think,

Our keepers being departed: and by these, Even by the uncourtlier as the gentler man, I read as in a glass their queen's plain heart, And that by her at last I shall not die.

Scene III. - Greenwich Palace.

Queen Elizabeth and Davison.

Elizabeth. Thou hast seen Lord Howard? I bade him send thee.

Davison. Madam,
But now he came upon me hard at hand
And by your gracious message bade me in.

Eliz. The day is fair as April: hast thou been Abroad this morning? 'T is no winter's sun That makes these trees forget their nakedness And all the glittering ground, as 't were in hope, Breathe laughingly.

Dav. Indeed, the gracious air

Had drawn me forth into the park, and thence Comes my best speed to attend upon your grace.

Eliz. My grace is not so gracious as the sun That graces thus the late distempered air: And you should oftener use to walk abroad, Sir, than your custom is: I would not have Good servants heedless of their natural health To do me sickly service. It were strange That one twice bound as woman and as queen To care for good men's lives and loyalties Should prove herself toward either dangerous.

Dav. That

Can be no part of any servant's fear Who lives for service of your majesty.

Eliz. I would not have it be — God else for-

Who have so loyal servants as I hold
All now that bide about me: for I will not Think, though such villainy once were in men's minds,

That twice among mine English gentlemen
Shall hearts be found so foul as theirs who thought,
When I was horsed for hunting, to waylay
And shoot me through the back at unawares
With poisoned bullets: nor, thou knowest, would I,

When this was opened to me, take such care, Ride so fenced round about with iron guard,

45

55

Or walk so warily as men counselled me
For loyal fear of what thereafter might
More prosperously be plotted: nay, God knows, 35
I would not hold on such poor terms my life,
With such a charge upon it, as to breathe
In dread of death or treason till the day
That they should stop my trembling breath, and ease

The piteous heart that panted like a slave's
Of all vile fear for ever. So to live
Were so much hatefuller than thus to die,
I do not think that man or woman draws
Base breath of life the loathsomest on earth
Who by such purchase of perpetual fear
And deathless doubt of all in trust of none
Would shudderingly prolong it.

Your servants know that greatness of your heart Which gives you yet unguarded to men's eyes, And were unworthier found to serve or live Than is the unworthiest of them, did not this Make all their own hearts hotter with desire To be the bulwark or the price of yours Paid to redeem it from the arrest of death.

Eliz. So haply should they be whose hearts beat true

With loyal blood: but whoso says they are Is but a loving liar.

Dav. I trust your grace
Hath in your own heart no such doubt of them
As speaks in mockery through your lips.

Eliz. By God,

I say much less than righteous truth might speak

Of their loud loves that ring with emptiness, And hollow-throated loyalties whose heart Is wind and clamorous promise. Ye desire, With all your souls ye swear that ye desire The queen of Scots were happily removed, And not a knave that loves me will put hand To the enterprise ye look for only of me Who only would forbear it.

Dav. If your grace
Be minded yet it shall be done at all,
The way that were most honourable and just

Were safest, sure, and best.

Eliz. I dreamt last night Our murderess there in hold had tasted death By execution of the sentence done That was pronounced upon her; and the news So stung my heart with wrath to hear of it That had I had a sword—look to 't, and 'ware!—I had thrust it through thy body.

Dav. God defend!
'T was well I came not in your highness' way
While the hot mood was on you. But indeed

I would know soothly if your mind be changed 80 From its late root of purpose.

No, by God: Eliz. But I were fain it could be somewise done And leave the blame not on me. And so much, If there were love and honesty in one Whom I held faithful and exact of care, 85 Should easily be performed; but here I find This dainty fellow so precise a knave As will take all things dangerous on his tongue And nothing on his hand: hot-mouthed and large In zeal to stuff mine ears with promises, 90 But perjurous in performance: did he not Set hand among you to the bond whereby He is bound at utmost hazard of his life To do me such a service? Yet I could Have wrought as well without him, had I wist 95 Of this faint falsehood in his heart: there is That Wingfield whom thou wot'st of, would have done

With glad goodwill what I required of him, And made no Puritan mouths on 't.

Dav.

Madam, yet
Far better were it all should but be done
By line of law and judgment.

Eliz.

There be men

Wiser than thou that see this otherwise.

Dav. All is not wisdom that of wise men comes,

Nor are all eyes that search the ways of state Clear as a just man's conscience. Eliza. Proverbs! ha? 105 Who made thee master of these sentences, Prime tongue of ethics and philosophy? Dav. An honest heart to serve your majesty; Nought else nor subtler in its reach of wit Than very simpleness of meaning. Eliz. IIO I do believe thee; heartily I do. Did my lord admiral not desire thee bring The warrant for her execution? Dan. Ay, Madam; here is it. I would it might not be, Or being so just were yet not necessary. 115 Art thou not heartily sorry - wouldst thou not, I say, be sad — to see me sign it?

Dav. Madam,
I grieve at any soul's mishap that lives,
And specially for shipwreck of a life
To you so near allied: but seeing this doom
Wrung forth from justice by necessity,
I had rather guilt should bleed than innocence.
Eliz. When I shall sign, take thou this instantly

To the lord chancellor; see it straight be sealed
As quietly as he may, not saying a word,

12

That no man come to know it untimely: then Send it to the earls of Kent and Shrewsbury Who are here set down to see this justice done: I would no more be troubled with this coil Till all be through. But, for the place of doom, 130 The hall there of the castle, in my mind, Were fitter than the court or open green. And as thou goest betake thee on thy way To Walsingham, where he lies sick at home, And let him know what hath of us been done: 135 Whereof the grief, I fear me, shall go near To kill his heart outright.

Dav. Your majesty

Hath yet not signed the warrant.

Eliz. Ha! God's blood

Art thou from tutor of philosophy late
Grown counsellor too and more than counsellor, 140
To appoint me where and what this hand of
mine

Shall at thy beck obsequiously subscribe
And follow on thy finger? By God's death,
What if it please me now not sign at all?
This letter of my kinswoman's last writ
Hath more compulsion in it, and more power
To enforce my pity, than a thousand tongues
Dictating death against her in mine ear
Of mine own vassal subjects. Here but now
She writes me she thanks God with all her heart 150

160

That it hath pleased him by the mean of me To make an end of her life's pilgrimage, Which hath been weary to her: and doth not ask

To see its length drawn longer, having had Too much experience of its bitterness: But only doth entreat me, since she may Look for no favour at their zealous hands Who are first in councils of my ministry, .That only I myself will grant her prayers; Whereof the first is, since she cannot hope For English burial with such Catholic rites As here were used in time of the ancient kings, Mine ancestors and hers, and since the tombs Lie violated in Scotland of her sires, That so soon ever as her enemies Shall with her innocent blood be satiated, Her body by her servants may be borne To some ground consecrated, there to be Interred: and rather, she desires, in France, Where sleep her honoured mother's ashes; so At length may her poor body find the rest Which living it has never known: thereto, She prays me, from the fears she hath of those To whose harsh hand I have abandoned her, She may not secretly be done to death, But in her servants' sight and others', who May witness her obedience kept and faith

To the true church, and guard her memory safe
From slanders haply to be blown abroad
Concerning her by mouths of enemies: last,
She asks that her attendants, who so well
And faithfully through all her miseries past Have served her, may go freely where they please,

And lose not those small legacies of hers
Which poverty can yet bequeath to them.
This she conjures me by the blood of Christ,
Our kinship, and my grandsire's memory,
Who was her father's grandsire and a king,
And by the name of queen she bears with her
Even to the death, that I will not refuse,
And that a word in mine own hand may thus Assure her, who will then as she hath lived
Die mine affectionate sister and prisoner. See, Howe'er she have sinned, what heart were mine,
if this

Drew no tears from me: not the meanest soul 195 That lives most miserable but with such words Must needs draw down men's pity.

Dav.

Sure it is,
This queen hath skill of writing: and her hand
Hath manifold eloquence with various voice
To express discourse of sirens or of snakes,
A mermaid's or a monster's, uttering best
All music or all malice. Here is come

A letter writ long since of hers to you From Sheffield Castle, which for shame or fear She durst not or she would not thence despatch, 205 Sent secretly to me from Fotheringay, Not from her hand, but with her own hand writ, So foul of import and malignity I durst not for your majesty's respect With its fierce infamies afire from hell 210 Offend your gracious eyesight: but because Your justice by your mercy's ignorant hand Hath her fair eyes put out, and walks now blind Even by the pit's edge deathward, pardon me If what you never should have seen be shown By hands that rather would take fire in hand Than lay in yours this writing.

Gives her a letter.

Eliz.

By this light,

Whate'er be here, thou hadst done presumptuously,

And Walsingham thy principal, to keep
Aught from mine eyes that being to me designed 220
Might even with most offence enlighten them.
Here is her hand indeed; and she takes up

Reading.

In gracious wise enough the charge imposed By promise on her and desire of ours, How loth soe'er she be, regretfully To bring such things in question of discourse

225

Yet with no passion but sincerity, As God shall witness her, declares to us What our good lady of Shrewsbury said to her Touching ourself in terms ensuing; whereto Answering she chid this dame for such belief And reprehended for licentious tongue To speak so lewdly of us: which herself Believes not, knowing the woman's natural heart And evil will as then to usward. Here 235 She writes no more than I would well believe Of her as of the countess. Ha!

Day. Your grace Shall but defile and vex your eyes and heart

To read these villainies through.

God's death, man! peace: Eliz. Thou wert not best incense me toward thine own, 240 Whose eyes have been before me in them. What! Was she not mad to write this? One that had Your promise - lay with you times numberless -All license and all privateness that may Be used of wife and husband! yea, of her 245 And more dead men than shame remembers. God Shall stand her witness — with the devil of hell For sponsor to her vows, whose spirit in her Begot himself this issue. Ha, the duke! - Nay, God shall give me patience - and his knave,

And Hatton — God have mercy! nay, but hate,

Hate and constraint and rage have wrecked her wits,

And continence of life cut off from lust,

— This common stale of Scotland, that has tried
The sins of three rank nations, and consumed 255
Their veins whose life she took not — Italy,
France that put half this poison in her blood,
And her own kingdom that being sick therewith
Vomited out on ours the venomous thing
Whose head we set not foot on — but may God 260
Make my fame fouler through the world than hers
And ranker in men's record, if I spare
The she-wolf that I saved, the woman-beast,
Wolf-woman — how the Latin rings we know,
And what lewd lair first reared her, and whose hand

Writ broad across the Louvre and Holyrood

Lupanar — but no brothel ever bred

Or breathed so rank a soul's infection, spawned

Or spat such foulness in God's face and man's

Or festered in such falsehood as her breath

Strikes honour sick with, and the spirit of shame

Dead as her fang shall strike herself, and send

The serpent that corruption calls her soul

To vie strange venoms with the worm of hell And make the face of darkness and the grave Blush hotter with the fires wherein that soul

Sinks deeper than damnation.

Dav. Let your grace Think only that but now the thing is known And self-discovered which too long your love Too dangerously hath cherished; and forget All but that end which yet remains for her, That right by pity be not overcome.

Eliz. God pity so my soul as I do right, And show me no more grace alive or dead Than I do justice here. Give me again That warrant I put by, being foolish: yea, Thy word spake sooth - my soul's eyes were put out -

I could not see for pity. Thou didst well — I am bounden to thee heartily - to cure My sight of this distemper, and my soul. Here in God's sight I set mine hand, who thought Never to take this thing upon it, nor

Do God so bitter service. Take this hence: And let me see no word nor hear of her

Till the sun see not such a soul alive.

ACT V MARY STUART

ACT V.

Scene I. — Mary's Chamber in Fotheringay Castle.

Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton.

Mary Stuart (sings).

O Lord my God,
I have trusted in thee;
O Jesu my dearest one,
Now set me free.
In prison's oppression,
In sorrow's obsession,
I weary for thee.
With sighing and crying
Bowed down as dying,

20

I adore thee, I implore thee, set me free!

Free are the dead: yet fain I would have had Once, before all captivity find end,
Some breath of freedom living. These that come,
I think, with no such message, must not find,
For all this lameness of my limbs, a heart
As maimed in me with sickness. Three years gone

When last I parted from the earl marshal's charge,

I did not think to see his face again Turned on me as his prisoner. Now his wife Will take no jealousy more to hear of it,

30

I trust, albeit we meet not as unfriends, If it be mortal news he brings me. Go, If I seem ready, as meseems I should, And well arrayed to bear myself indeed None otherwise than queenlike in their sight, Bid them come in. Exit Mary Beaton.

I cannot tell at last

If it be fear or hope that should expect Death: I have had enough of hope, and fear Was none of my familiars while I lived Such life as had more pleasant things to lose Than death or life may now divide me from. 'T is not so much to look upon the sun With eyes that may not lead us where we will, And halt behind the footless flight of hope With feet that may not follow: nor were aught 35 So much, of all things life may think to have, That one not cowardly born should find it worth The purchase of so base a price as this, To stand self-shamed as coward. I do not think This is mine end that comes upon me: but I had liefer far it were than, were it not, That ever I should fear it.

Enter Kent, Shrewsbury, Beale, and Sheriff. Sirs, good day:

With such good heart as prisoners have, I bid You and your message welcome.

Kent. Madam, this

The secretary of the council here hath charge To read as their commission. Let me hear Mary Stuart. In as brief wise as may be eem the time The purport of it. Our commission here Reale. Given by the council under the great seal Pronounces on your head for present doom 50 Death, by this written sentence. Mary Stuart. Ay, my lords? May I believe this, and not hold myself Mocked as a child with shadows? In God's name, Speak you, my lord of Shrewsbury: let me know If this be dream or waking. Kent. Verily, 55 No dream it is, nor dreamers we that pray, Madam, you meetly would prepare yourself To stand before God's judgment presently. Mary Stuart. I had rather so than ever stand again Before the face of man's. Why speak not you, 60 To whom I speak, my lord earl marshal? Nay, Look not so heavily: by my life, he stands As one at point to weep. Why, good my lord, To know that none may swear by Mary's life

And hope again to find belief of man

Upon so slight a warrant, should not bring 90

This trouble on your eyes; look up, and say The word you have for her that never was Less than your friend, and prisoner. Shrewsbury. None save this.

Which willingly I would not speak, I may; That presently your time is come to die.

Mary Stuart. Why, then, I am well content to leave a world

Wherein I am no more serviceable at all To God or man, and have therein so long Endured so much affliction. All my life I have ever earnestly desired the love And friendship of your queen; have warned her oft

Of coming dangers; and have cherished long The wish that I but once might speak with her In plain-souled confidence; being well assured, 80 Had we but once met, there an end had been Of jealousies between us: but our foes, With equal wrong toward either, treacherously Have kept us still in sunder: by whose craft And crooked policy hath my sister's crown Fallen in great peril, and myself have been Imprisoned, and inveterately maligned, And here must now be murdered. But I know That only for my faith's sake I must die, And this to know for truth is recompense As large as all my sufferings. For the crime

Wherewith I am charged, upon this holy book I lay mine hand for witness of my plea, I am wholly ignorant of it; and solemnly Declare that never yet conspiracy Devised against the queen my sister's life Took instigation or assent from me.

Kent. You swear but on a popish Testament: Such oaths are all as worthless as the book.

Mary Stuart. I swear upon the book wherein
I trust:

Would you give rather credit to mine oath Sworn on your scriptures that I trust not in?

Kent. Madam, I fain would have you heartily Renounce your superstition; toward which end With us the godly dean of Peterborough, Good Richard Fletcher, well approved for faith Of God and of the queen, is hither come To proffer you his prayerful ministry.

Mary Stuart. If you, my lords, or he will pray for me,

I shall be thankful for your prayers; but may not 110 With theirs that hold another faith mix mine. I pray you therefore that mine almoner may Have leave to attend on me, that from his hands I, having made confession, may receive The sacrament.

Kent. We may not grant you this. 115
Mary Stuart. I shall not see my chaplain ere
I die?

But two months gone this grace was granted me
By word expressly from your queen, to have Again his ministration: and at last
In the utter hour and bitter strait of death
Is this denied me?

Kent. Madam, for your soul More meet it were to cast these mummeries out And bear Christ only in your heart, than serve With ceremonies of ritual hand and tongue His mere idolatrous likeness.

Mary Stuart. This were strange 125
That I should bear him visible in my hand
Or keep with lips and knees his titular rites
And cast in heart no thought upon him. Nay,
Put me, I pray, to no more argument:
But if this least thing be not granted, yet

130
Grant me to know the season of my death.

Shrews. At eight by dawn to-morrow you must die.

Mary Stuart. So shall I hardly see the sun again.

By dawn to-morrow? meanest men condemned Give not their lives' breath up so suddenly: 135 Howbeit, I had rather yield you thanks, who make

Such brief end of the bitterness of death For me who have borne such bitter length of life, Than plead with protestation of appeal

For half a piteous hour's remission: nor 140
Henceforward shall I be denied of man
Aught, who may never now crave aught again
But whence is no denial. Yet shall this
Not easily be believed of men, nor find
In foreign ears acceptance, that a queen 145
Should be thrust out of life thus. Good my friend,
Bid my physician Gorion come to me:
I have to speak with him—sirs, with your leave —
Of certain monies due to me in France.
What, shall I twice desire your leave, my lords, 150
To live these poor last hours of mine alive
At peace among my friends? I have much to do,
And little time wherein to do it is left.
Shrews. (to Kent apart). I pray she may not mean worse than I would
Against herself ere morning.
Kent. Let not then 15
This French knave's drugs come near her, nor himself:
We will take order for it.
Shrews. Nay, this were but
To exasperate more her thwarted heart, and make Despair more desperate than itself. Pray God She be not minded to compel us put Die De mot mande to compet de par
Force at the last upon her of men's hands

To hale her violently to death, and make Judgment look foul and fierce as murder's face With stain of strife and passion.

Exeunt all but Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton.

Mary Stuart.

So, my friend,

The last of all our Maries are you left
To-morrow. Strange has been my life, and now
Strange looks my death upon me: yet, albeit
Nor the hour nor manner of it be mine to choose
Ours is it yet, and all men's in the world,
To make death welcome in what wise we will.
Bid you my chaplain, though he see me not,
Watch through the night and pray for me:

perchance,

When ere the sundawn they shall bring me forth, I may behold him, and upon my knees Receive his blessing. Let our supper be Served earlier in than wont was: whereunto I bid my true poor servants here, to take Farewell and drink at parting to them all The cup of my last kindness, in good hope They shall stand alway constant in their faith And dwell in peace together: thereupon What little store is left me will I share Among them, and between my girls divide My wardrobe and my jewels severally, Reserving but the black robe and the red That shall attire me for my death: and last

185

180

With mine own hand shall be my will writ out And all memorials more set down therein That I would leave for legacies of love To my next kinsmen and my household folk. 190 And to the king my brother yet of France Must I write briefly, but a word to say I am innocent of the charge whereon I die Now for my right's sake claimed upon this crown, And our true faith's sake, but am barred from sight 195 Even of mine almoner here, though hard at hand; And I would bid him take upon his charge The keeping of my servants, as I think He shall not for compassionate shame refuse Albeit his life be softer than his heart; 200 And in religion for a queen's soul pray That once was styled Most Christian, and is now In the true faith about to die, deprived Of all her past possessions. But this most And first behoves it, that the king of Spain 205 By Gorion's word of mouth receive my heart, Who soon shall stand before him. Bid the leech Come hither, and alone, to speak with me. Exit Mary Beaton.

She is dumb as death: yet never in her life
Hath she been quick of tongue. For all the rest, 210
Poor souls, how well they love me, all as well
I think I know: and one of them or twain
At least may surely see me to my death

Ere twice the hours have changed again. Perchance

Love that can weep not would the gladlier die 215
For those it cannot weep on. Time wears thin:
They should not now play laggard: nay, he comes,

The last that ever speaks alone with me Before my soul shall speak alone with God.

Enter Gorion.

I have sent once more for you to no such end 220 As sick men for physicians: no strong drug May put the death next morning twelve hours back

Whose twilight overshadows me, that am Nor sick nor medicinable. Let me know If I may lay the last of all my trust On you that ever shall be laid on man To prove him kind and loyal.

Gorion. So may God

Deal with me, madam, as I prove to you Faithful, though none but I were in the world That you might trust beside.

Mary Stuart. With equal heart 230

Do I believe and thank you. I would send
To Paris for the ambassador from Spain
This letter with two diamonds, which your craft
For me must cover from men's thievish eyes
Where they may be not looked for.

Easily Gar. 235 Within some molten drug may these be hid, And faithfully by me conveyed to him.

Mary Stuart. The lesser of them shall he keep in sign

Of my good friendship toward himself: but this In token to King Philip shall he give 240 That for the truth I die, and dying commend To him my friends and servants, Gilbert Curle, His sister, and Jane Kennedy, who shall To-night watch by me; and my ladies all That have endured my prison: let him not Forget from his good favour one of these That I remember to him: Charles Arundel, And either banished Paget; one whose heart Was better toward my service than his hand, Morgan: and of mine exiles for their faith, 250 The prelates first of Glasgow and of Ross; And Liggons and Throgmorton, that have lost For me their leave to live on English earth; And Westmoreland, that lives now more forlorn Than died that earl who rose for me with him. 255 These I beseech him favour for my sake Still: and forget not, if he come again To rule as king in England, one of them That were mine enemies here: the treasurer first, And Leicester, Walsingham, and Huntingdon, 260 At Tutbury once my foe, fifteen years gone,

And Wade that spied upon me three years since, And Paulet here my gaoler: set them down For him to wreak wrath's utmost justice on, In my revenge remembered. Though I be 265 Dead, let him not forsake his hope to reign Upon this people: with my last breath left I make this last prayer to him, that not the less He will maintain the invasion yet designed Of us before on England: let him think, 270 It is God's quarrel, and on earth a cause Well worthy of his greatness: which being won, Let him forget no man of these nor me. And now will I lie down, that four hours' sleep May give me strength before I sleep again And need take never thought for waking more.

Scene II. - The Presence Chamber.

Shrewsbury, Kent, Paulet, Drury, Melville, and Attendants.

Kent. The stroke is past of eight.

Shrewsbury.

Not far, my lord.

Kent. What stays the provost and the sheriff

yet
That went ere this to bring the prisoner forth?
What, are her doors locked inwards? then per-

chance

Our last night's auguries of some close design

25

By death contrived of her self-slaughterous hand To baffle death by justice hit but right The heart of her bad purpose.

Shrews. Fear it not:

See where she comes, a queenlier thing to see Than whom such thoughts take hold on.

Enter Mary Stuart, led by two gentlemen and preceded by the Sheriff; Mary Beaton, Barbara Mowbray, and other ladies behind, who remain in the doorway. Melville (kneeling to Mary). Woe am I, 10

Madam, that I must bear to Scotland back
Such tidings watered with such tears as these.

Mary Stuart. Weep not, good Melville: rather should your heart

Rejoice that here an end is come at last
Of Mary Stuart's long sorrows; for be sure
That all this world is only vanity.
And this record I pray you make of me,
That a true woman to my faith I die,
And true to Scotland and to France: but God
Forgive them that have long desired mine end
And with false tongues have thirsted for my blood

And with false tongues have thirsted for my blood As the hart thirsteth for the water-brooks.

O God, who art truth, and the author of all truth, Thou knowest the extreme recesses of my heart, And how that I was willing all my days

That England should with Scotland be fast friends.

Commend me to my son: tell him that I
Have nothing done to prejudice his rights
As king: and now, good Melville, fare thee well.
My lord of Kent, whence comes it that your charge

Hath bidden back my women there at door Who fain to the end would bear me company? Kent. Madam, this were not seemly nor dis-

That these should so have leave to vex men's ears With cries and loose lamentings: haply too They might in superstition seek to dip Their handkerchiefs for relics in your blood.

Mary Stuart. That will I pledge my word they shall not. Nay,

The queen would surely not deny me this,
The poor last thing that I shall ask on earth.
Even a far meaner person dying I think
She would not have so handled. Sir, you know
I am her cousin, of her grandsire's blood,
A queen of France by marriage, and by birth
Anointed queen of Scotland. My poor girls
Desire no more than but to see me die.

Shrews. Madam, you have leave to elect of this your train

Two ladies with four men to go with you.

Mary Stuart. I choose from forth my Scottish following here

70

Jane Kennedy, with Elspeth Curle: of men, Bourgoin and Gorion shall attend on me, Gervais and Didier. Come then, let us go.

Exeunt: manent Mary Beaton and Barbara Mowbray.

Barbara. I wist I was not worthy, though my child

It is that her own hands made Christian: but I deemed she should have bid you go with her. 55 Alas, and would not all we die with her?

Mary Beaton. Why, from the gallery here at hand your eyes

May go with her along the hall beneath
Even to the scaffold: and I fain would hear
What fain I would not look on. Pray you, then, 60
If you may bear to see it as those below,
Do me that sad good service of your eyes
For mine to look upon it, and declare
All that till all be done I will not see;
I pray you of your pity.

Barb.
Though mine heart

65

Barb. Though mine heart
Break, it shall not for fear forsake the sight
That may be faithful yet in following her,
Nor yet for grief refuse your prayer, being fain
To give your love such bitter comfort, who

So long have never left her.

Mary Beaton. Till she die — I have ever known I shall not till she die.

80

90

See you yet aught? if I hear spoken words, My heart can better bear these pulses, else Unbearable, that rend it.

Barb. Yea, I see
Stand in mid hall the scaffold, black as death,
And black the block upon it: all around,
Against the throng a guard of halberdiers;
And the axe against the scaffold-rail reclined
And two men masked on either hand beyond:
And hard behind the block a cushion set,
Black, as the chair behind it.

Mary Beaton. When I saw
Fallen on the scaffold once a young man's head,
Such things as these I saw not. Nay, but on:
I knew not that I spake: and toward your ears

Indeed I spake not.

Barb. All those faces change;
She comes more royally than ever yet
Fell foot of man triumphant on this earth,
Imperial more than empire made her, born
Enthroned as queen sat never. Not a line
Stirs of her sovereign feature: like a bride
Brought home she mounts the scaffold; and her eyes

Sweep regal round the cirque beneath, and rest, Subsiding with a smile. She sits, and they, The doomsmen earls, beside her; at her left All.

95

The sheriff, and the clerk at hand on high, To read the warrant.

Mary Beaton. None stands there but knows What things therein are writ against her: God Knows what therein is writ not. God forgive

Barb. Not a face there breathes of all the throng

But is more moved than hers to hear this read, 100

Whose look alone is changed not.

Mary Beaton. Once I knew A face that changed not in as dire an hour More than the queen's face changes. Hath he not Ended?

Barb. You cannot hear them speak below:
Come near and hearken; bid not me repeat
All.

Mary Beaton. I beseech you — for I may not come.

Barb. Now speaks Lord Shrewsbury but a word or twain,

And brieflier yet she answers, and stands up

As though to kneel, and pray.

Mary Beaton. I too have prayed — God hear at last her prayers not less than mine, 110 Which failed not, sure, of hearing.

Barb. Now draws nigh That heretic priest, and bows himself, and thrice

Strives, as a man that sleeps in pain, to speak, Stammering: she waves him by, as one whose prayers

She knows may nought avail her: now she kneels, 115 And the earls rebuke her, and she answers not, Kneeling. O Christ, whose likeness there engraved

She strikes against her bosom, hear her! Now That priest lifts up his voice against her prayer, Praying: and a voice all round goes up with his: 120 But hers is lift up higher than climbs their cry, In the great psalms of penitence; and now She prays aloud in English; for the Pope Our father, and his church; and for her son, And for the queen her murderess; and that God 125 May turn from England yet his wrath away; And so forgives her enemies; and implores High intercession of the saints with Christ, Whom crucified she kisses on his cross, And crossing now her breast — Ah, heard you not?

Even as thine arms were spread upon the cross, So make thy grace, O Jesus, wide for me, Receive me to thy mercy so, and so Forgive my sins.

Mary Beaton. So be it, if so God please.

Is she not risen up yet?

Barb. Yea, but mine eyes 135

Darken: because those deadly twain close masked Draw nigh as men that crave forgiveness, which Gently she grants: for now, she said, I hope You shall end all my troubles. Now meseems They would put hand upon her as to help, And disarray her raiment: but she smiles — Heard you not that? can you not hear nor speak, Poor heart, for pain? Truly, she said, my lords, I never had such chamber-grooms before As these to wait on me.

Mary Beaton. An end, an end. 145
Barb. Now come those twain upon the scaffold up

Whom she preferred before us: and she lays Her crucifix down, which now the headsman takes

Into his cursed hand, but being rebuked
Puts back for shame that sacred spoil of hers.
And now they lift her veil up from her head
Softly, and softly draw the black robe off,
And all in red as of a funeral flame
She stands up statelier yet before them, tall
And clothed as if with sunset: and she takes From Elspeth's hand the crimson sleeves, and draws

Their covering on her arms: and now those twain Burst out aloud in weeping: and she speaks— Weep not; I promised for you. Now she kneels; And Jane binds round a kerchief on her eyes: 160 And smiling last her heavenliest smile on earth, She waves a blind hand toward them, with Farewell,

Farewell, to meet again: and they come down And leave her praying aloud, In thee, O Lord, I put my trust: and now, that psalm being through, 165 She lays between the block and her soft neck Her long white peerless hands up tenderly, Which now the headsman draws again away, But softly too: now stir her lips again—
Into thine hands, O Lord, into thine hands, 170 Lord, I commend my spirit: and now—but now, Look you, not I, the last upon her.

Mary Beaton. Ha!

He strikes awry: she stirs not. Nay, but now He strikes aright, and ends it.

Barb. Hark, a cry.

Voice below. So perish all found enemies of the queen!

Another Voice. Amen.

Mary Beaton. I heard that very cry go up Far off long since to God, who answers here.

THE END.

Potes to Mary Stuart

For purely biographical material see the Index of Persons.

- I. The motto from Æschylus is thus translated by Plumptre: "Now for the tongue of bitter hate let tongue Of bitter hate be given. Loud and long The voice of Justice claiming now her debt: And for the murderous blow Let him who slew with murderous blow repay. 'That the wrong-doer bear the wrong he did,' Thrice-ancient saying of a far-off time, This speaketh as we speak."
- 3. as the first part . . . was dedicated. The dedication of Chastelard runs as follows: "I dedicate this play, as a partial expression of reverence and gratitude, to the chief of living poets; to the first dramatist of his age; to the greatest exile, and therefore to the greatest man of France; to Victor Hugo." This is followed by an extract from Maundevile's Voiage and Travaile, ch. xxvIII. "Another Yle is there toward the Northe, in the See Occean, where that ben fulle cruele and ful evele Wommen of Nature; and thei han precious Stones in hire Eyen; and thei ben of that kynde, that zif they beholden ony man, thei sley him anon with the beholdynge, as dothe the Basilisk." Bothwell has a motto from Æschylus, and a dedication à Victor Hugo, in the form of a French sonnet.
- 4. Time. The dates given by Swinburne are New Style. In Old Style they become August 4 and February 8. Old Style is used for all the dates in these notes. When a date, however, falls between January 1 and March 21, it is credited to the calendar year of our modern reckoning. Thus the date of Mary's execution is given as February 8, 1587, instead of 1586-7.

7. Act I. Scene I. Date August 4, 1586. 7, 5. Shall bleach to death in prison. The date of this scene is August 4, 1586. Mary Stuart has been a prisoner of Elizabeth, or at least an unwilling guest, for eighteen years.

II, 112. he that went forth huntsman. Acteon, for his boastfulness changed by Artemis into a stag, and torn to pieces by his own hounds on Mount Cithæron.

13-14. 157-58. This is ... queen. The letter is dated July 17, 1586, and may be found in Labanoff's Recueil (6, 383), together with a discussion of its authenticity. It has been the subject of much controversy, since it was mainly upon the evidence of this letter that Mary was convicted. Her defenders have claimed that the incriminating passages were interpolations forged by Phillipps, Walsingham's spy. According to the testimony of Nau and Curle, there was first a French minute in Mary's autograph, then a copy of this minute made by Nau and given to Curle, then an English translation of this copy, made by Curle and by him put into cipher. Phillipps intercepted this cipher, translated it for Walsingham, and then took it to London, and passed it on to Babington, July 29. Phillipps thus had the letter in his possession for more than ten days. It is only in this (possibly) altered form that the letter has been preserved. The intermediate forms, which were certainly in the hands of the ministers, mysteriously disappeared. Babington, of course, received the entire contents of the letter in good faith.

16, 221-22. by what means . . . proceed. This passage, and the later passage (19, 278-293) of sixteen lines, We can make no day sure . . . cut the common posts off, are believed by Mary's defenders to have been forged by Walsingham or Phillipps.

16, 224. this last hold. Chartley Castle.

17, 230. the ambassador of Spain in France. Mendoza.

17, 250-51. the plot laid of the Puritan part. This plot seems to have been an invention of Mary.

24, 403. the envoy sent from France, Châteauneuf, who had just been appointed to succeed Mauvissière.

24, 413. the Castle of Dudley. A few miles south of Chartley, near Birmingham.

28, 493. those following four. Burghley, Walsingham,

Hunsdon, and Knowles, named in the following speech.

28-29, 515-16. at first She writes me, etc. A brief dated June 25, 1586.

35, 671. Good Captain Ballard, Father Fortescue. Father Ballard assumed the name of Captain Fortescue when he visited England in disguise.

39, 748. Fly; farewell. All the conspirators but Ballard escaped arrest at this time, but were soon thereafter tracked to their hiding-places and captured.

40. Act I. Scenes II, III. Dated August 8, 1586.

40. Chartley. Chartley Manor is in Staffordshire, and then belonged to the Earl of Essex. The castle is now a ruin.

41. 7. The gospeller that bade us to the sport. Sir Amias Paulet, contemptuously called "gospeller" on account of his rigid Puritanism.

41, 22. Since you rode last. Mary's flight to the border after her defeat at Langside, when she rode sixty miles in one day.

42, 36. The letter that I writ, etc. "The famous and terrible letter in which, with many gracious excuses and professions of regret and attachment, she transmits to Elizabeth a full and vivid report of the hideous gossip retailed by Bess of Hardwick regarding her character and person at a time when the reporter of these abominations was on friendly terms with her husband's royal charge." Swinburne. This letter (conjecturally dated November, 1584) may be read in Labanoff's Recueil, 6, 50. It is preserved among the Cecil papers at Hatfield House, and has never left the possession of Burghley's descendants. Labanoff's belief is that it was never seen by Elizabeth, but was either despatched to her and intercepted by Burghley, or was not sent at all, but seized with Mary's other papers at Chartley in 1586.

43, 54. That other Bess. Elizabeth of Hardwick, Countess of Shrewsbury.

45, 116. Her and her sons . . . four. This is an error. The Countess of Shrewsbury had issue only by the second of her four husbands. The Countess and her sons circulated a scandalous story about Mary and the Earl of Shrewsbury, which they were afterwards forced to retract.

46, 128. her kindless lovers. Unnatural lovers. "Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!" Hamlet, 11, 2.

46, 132. Her chamberlain. Sir Christopher Hatton.

46, 140. another born her man. Leicester.

46, 144. one base-born, a stranger. One Simier, in attendance upon the Duc d'Anjou.

46, 147. the duke . . . should be. The Duc d'Alencon, afterwards Duc d'Anjou, son of Catherine de' Medici, and brother of Charles IX and Henry III. Although much younger than Elizabeth, he was proposed to her for a husband, and she kept him "hoping and languishing" for twelve years, until his death in 1584.

51, 243-44. Parma stands . . . stead. The Prince of Parma was a nephew of Don John of Austria.

51, 248. our kinsman king. Henry III, brother of Mary's first husband.

53, 311. My heart . . . quicken. Note that this line is broken, and completed after the interpolated song.

55, 337. Poor boy that played her bridegroom!

Francis II, married to Mary at the age of fifteen.

55, 349. Doth he wait on you, etc. Thomas Phillipps, secretary and spy of Walsingham. "This Phillippes is of low stature, slender every way, dark yellow heared on the head and cleare yellow bearded, eated in the face with small pockes, of short sight, thirtye yeares of age by apparance and as is sayd secretarye Walsingham's man." Letter from Mary to Morgan, July 17, 1586.

57, 397. Tixall. An estate near Chartley, owned by Sir

Walter Aston.

62, 499-500. last month You writ my master word, etc. Paulet to Walsingham, June 29, 1586. See Paulet's Letter Book, 211.

63, 522. the brewer, your honest man. It was arranged by the treacherous Gifford that the Burton brewer who supplied Chartley with ale should provide a special cask for Mary and her household. This cask was furnished with a false bottom, by means of which letters were received and despatched. All this correspondence was brought into the hands of Walsingham.

66, 605. the old saw. "Out of God's blessing into the warm sun." A proverbial phrase of uncertain origin and meaning.

"Good King, that must approve the common saw,

Thou out of heaven's benediction comest

To the warm sun!" King Lear, 11, 2.

68, 36. Tutbury. In January, 1585, Mary was removed from Wingfield Manor to Tutbury Castle in Staffordshire, where she had been held for a time in 1569. In April, Sir Amias Paulet was appointed her keeper. On the Christmas Eve following she was removed to Chartley Castle in the same county.

68, 37. Your birthright in this land. Paulet belonged to a Somerset family, and his childhood was spent in that county and in Devonshire.

72, 135-36. you That have this gallant office. Sir Thomas Gorges.

73, 146. A face beside you, etc. Sir William Wade.

76, 218. and her with me. Mary Beaton.

79. Act II. Scene I. Dated late in August, 1586.

79. Windsor Castle. The royal residence on the Thames, near London, occupied by many English sovereigns from William the Conqueror to Victoria.

83, 90. the Parmesan. Alessandro Farnese, Prince of Parma, and governor of the Netherlands.

87, 187. with more pains, etc. The most shocking barbarity was shown in the execution of Babington and his accomplices.

89. Act II. Scene II. Mary returned to Chartley, August 30.

This scene must be dated soon after.

89, 12. seventeen days. From August 8 to August 30, according to Labanoff.

91, 45-47. the witness borne... By those her secretaries. Nau and Curle were interrogated September 2, and again September 20.

91, 55. The Frenchman. Curle.

93, 87. the most faithful head, etc. Chastelard was executed February 22, 1563.

93, 107. That I shall never leave her till she die. "But I will never leave you till you die." The closing line of Bothwell.

99. Tyburn. The place of execution of these conspirators was not Tyburn, but "a fielde at the upper end of Holborne, hard by the high way side to S. Giles."

100, 13-15. one that shall die . . . to his defence.

Babington.

102, 74. Shows seven for dead, etc. Babington, Ballard, Tichborne, Savage, Barnwell, Tilney, and Abington were executed September 20, 1586. Salisbury, Donn, Jones, Charnock, Travers, Gage, and Bellamy were executed on the day following.

103, 98. that hallowed earth. Ireland.

105, 150. And that my brother may possess, etc. Babington's estates, which were large, were forfeited to the crown, and afterwards bestowed upon Ralegh by Elizabeth.

106, 168. and verified a saying in me, etc. Silence gives consent.

III. Act III. Dated October 14, 1586.

111. Fotheringay Castle. Situated in Northamptonshire, near Peterborough. The trial of Mary took place here October 14-15, 1586, and her execution February 8, 1587. The castle was demolished in the seventeenth century.

cillors constituted the commission for the trial of Mary. They were appointed October 6, and thirty-six of them assembled at Fotheringay October 12. Mary at first refused to appear before them, but afterwards consented under protest, and the trial began October 14.

115, 103. that secretary's, Walsingham.

116, 116. the pope's bull. The bull of Pius V, excommunicating and dethroning Elizabeth, was issued in 1570. Similar bulls were issued by Gregory XIII and Sixtus V.

122, 277. her, who contrariwise, etc. "When Burghley brought against her the unanswerable charge of having at that moment in her service, and in receipt of an annual pension, the instigator of a previous attempt on the life of Elizabeth, she had the unwary audacity to cite in her justification the pensions allowed by Elizabeth to her adversaries in Scotland, and especially to her son. It is remarkable that just two months later, in a conversation with her keepers, she again made use of the same extraordinary argument in reply to the same inevitable imputation, and would not be brought to admit that the two cases were other than parallel." Swinburne.

125, 349. Esther than Judith. Instead of playing the part of Judith, who slew Holophernes, she would rather, like Esther, save her people from massacre.

126, 387. An act against their lives, etc. In October, 1584, "Walsingham and Burghley between them bethought them of a new and special appeal to the loyalty of the country. An 'Instrument of an Association for the preservation of the Queen's Majesty's Royal person' was drawn up with great care and circulated not only among the clergy and nobility, but among freeholders, farmers, and all men of substance in the several counties of England and Wales. . . . The signatories bound themselves under an oath to preserve the Queen's person with their substance and their lives, and to 'pursue to utter extermination' all who should attempt to harm her 'or claim succession to the crown by the untimely death of her Majesty.'" Augustus Jessopp. The provisions of this instrument were embodied in an Act of Parliament a few weeks later. It may be added that Mary subscribed to this "bond of association."

141. Act IV. Scene I. Dated November 28, 1586. Bellièvre had three interviews with Elizabeth, November 28, December 5, and December 24. The first of them is represented in this scene.

141. Richmond. On the Thames, between London and Windsor. Here Elizabeth often held court, and here she died. The palace was demolished in 1648.

141, 6-8. To take off . . . Authority. At midnight of the second day of Mary's trial at Fotheringay, Elizabeth sent a message to the commissioners adjourning the case to the Star-Chamber.

142, 26. piteous challenge and imperial plea. Mary's letter to Elizabeth, ? November 19, 1586. Labanoff, 6, 444. 144. 78. Wise Plato's word. See the Third Book of

The Republic. Jowett's Plato, III, 104.

145, 111. These nineteen . . . reign. Elizabeth had been upon the throne for nearly twenty-nine years. It may be that Bellièvre means the (nearly) nineteen years since Mary came to England.

145, 115. rampire. Rampart. The meaning is that fear of Mary's succession and a Catholic restoration had rallied the English people to Elizabeth's support, and that it would be ruinous to England to have this cause of unity removed.

146, 122. A certain prince's minister. Mendoza,

Philip's ambassador, formerly to England, now to France.

147, 144. she hath three times sought my life. The plots of Parry and Babington are two of the three mentioned.

Swinburne's coupling of the names of Lopez and Parry (82, 65) seems to indicate that the plot of Lopez stood in his mind as the third (see Index of Persons). Otherwise, the third would be supplied by Arden or Somerville, implicated in the Throckmorton conspiracy.

147, 158. who now this second time, etc. Morgan instigated Parry's attempted assassination as well as the Babington conspiracy.

150, 226-27. the claim . . . Philip. Should the Prince of Parma invade England, France would stand in greater peril from Spain than when menaced only by the claim of Philip to the English succession.

150, 232. Steer any way, etc. The death of Mary might lead to a Spanish occupation of England, thereby exposing France to danger from both north and south.

151, 247. The smooth-cheeked French man-harlot, nor that hand, etc. Charles IX of France and Philip II of Spain.

152, 274. those twain that come, etc. Gray and Sir Robert Melville. Melville was honest in his efforts to save Mary, but Gray, who ostensibly pleaded for her, wrote to Walsingham advising that she be murdered in secret.

154, 331. his dead father's slaver. Bothwell.

154, 337. that brother-in-law that was of ours.

Philip II.

157, 407. what fire of joy brake forth, etc. "From tower and steeple the bells crashed out, unceasing for a whole day and night. Church answered church till the news had been borne to the furthest glen in Cumberland. London was illuminated. Faggots blazed in town and village; and a shout of exultation rose out of every loyal throat." Froude.

161, 492-93. She to this Makes bitter answer, etc. The matter here given is paraphrased from Mary's letter to the Archbishop of Glasgow, November 24, 1586. Labanoff, 6, 466.

162, 522. Be persecuted even as David once. When Saul sent messengers to slay David in his house, he escaped through the window (I Samuel XIX, 12). Afterwards, Saul was defeated and slain on Mount Gilboa by the Philistines, and David succeeded him as king of Israel (I Samuel xxxI, I).

162, 528. Our shield shall not, etc. "For there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil." (2 Samuel 1, 21.)

163. Act IV. Scene II. Dated December 17, 1586. This date is determined by one of Paulet's letters.

165, 54. this hue and cry. "Rumours were spread, that London was fired, and the Queen of Scots had escaped; precepts of hue and cry were sent to the several towns, to retake the fugitive." G. Chalmers.

166, 81. Those treasons of the French ambassador. The ambassador was Châteauneuf. Swinburne says that Elizabeth "had a charge trumped up against him of participation in a conspiracy against her life."

167, 95. this man's tale, etc. See note just preceding. On January 4, 1587, one William Stafford, a notorious reprobate, sought out Destrappes, Châteauneuf's secretary, and took him to see a man named Moody, an inmate of the debtor's prison at Newgate, who offered, for the payment of his debt, to murder Elizabeth. Châteauneuf, being warned of this, indignantly drove Stafford from his presence when the latter appeared. Two days later, Destrappes was arrested and sent to the Tower. Stafford, failing in his attempt at blackmail, brought charges against Châteauneuf, who was summoned to defend himself before a council of ministers. Here Moody was impudent enough to accuse Châteauneuf to his face, but the case was so obviously trumped-up that nothing came of it. There is an anachronism in the discussion of this affair by Paulet and Drury, December 17, 1586.

167, 102. such means as once, etc. The murder of Darnley at Kirk of Field.

170, 179. That oath whereby we stand associated. The bond of association. See note 126, 387.

171, 222. Make heretics of these papers. Burn them. 172, 247-48. God forbid That I should make, etc. "God forbid that I should make so foul a shipwreck of myconscience, or leave so great a blot to my poor posterity, to shed blood without law or warrant." Paulet's Letter Book, 362.

176. Enter Mary Stuart and Mary Beaton. The material for this scene is taken from Paulet's letter to Davison, December 21, 1586.

176, 343. a memorial writ, etc. Mary's last letter to Elizabeth, December 19, 1586.

176, 349. take the assay of it. Mary offers to prove, by her own handling of the paper, that it is not poisoned.

177, 365. your queen's grandsire. Henry VII.

181, 451-52. that commission of your causes held At York. A conference held at York in October, 1568, to inquire into Mary's guilt in connection with the murder of Darnley. It was here that the famous Casket Letters were first produced. No definite conclusion was reached.

181, 459-60. his book Is extant. Probably A Defence of the Honour of the Right Highe, Mightye, and Noble Princesse Marie, Queene of Scotland and Dowager of France, etc. London, 1569. The book was at once suppressed, and copies of it are very rare.

182, 472. my lord treasurer. Burghley.

183, 488-90. my rebels here . . . have been Maintained. See note 122, 277.

- 183, 493-94. What did she . . . at Newhaven? Newhaven is Havre de Grace. This is an allusion to Elizabeth's occupation of that port with an English garrison in 1562, at the time of the French civil wars. Curiously enough, Paulet had been asked the same question by Catherine de' Medici in 1577, when he was at the French court.
- 184, 516. his entertainment there. In 1583 Walsingham was sent to Edinburgh to judge of affairs at close quarters, and to dissuade James from negotiating with Spain in his mother's behalf. He went reluctantly, and his mission was unfruitful.

188, 612-13. some one said I must be perilous ever.

"Men must love you in life's spite;
For you will always kill them; man by man
Your lips will bite them dead; yea, though you would,
You shall not spare one; all will die of you."

Chastelard, v, 2.

190, 668 my poor servant slain before my face. David Rizzio.

191, 678-79. of him indeed Record was made. He was avenged by the murder of Darnley.

195. Après tant de jours, etc. See Chastelard, 1, 2. This exquisite lyric is a notable illustration of Swinburne's French verse. To translate it would be a crime.

197. Act IV, Scene III. Dated February 1, 1587.

197. Greenwich. Situated on the Thames, a few miles below London Bridge. Here Elizabeth was born. The palace was destroyed during the Commonwealth, and afterwards rebuilt, but converted into a hospital.

201, 87. This dainty fellow. Sir Amias Paulet.

202, 112. my lord admiral. Charles Howard, Lord Howard of Effingham, Earl of Nottingham.

202, 124. the lord chancellor. Sir Thomas Bromley.

203, 145. This letter . . . last writ. The letter is dated December 19, 1586. It may be found in Labanoff, 6, 474.

204, 170. her honoured mother's. Mary of Guise.

207, 249-50. the duke . . . and his knave. The Duc d'Anjou, and one Simier, in attendance on him.

208, 263. The she-wolf that I saved, etc. Livy, as a rationalizing explanation of the Romulus and Remus story, suggests that the wolf (lupa) who suckled the princes was a courtesan. Hence the Latin word (lupanar) for brothel. By a sort of pun, this word is brought into relation with the Louvre (Lupara or Louverie) which was originally the name of a hunting-lodge.

213. Act V. Scene I. Dated February 7, 1586.

213. O Lord my God, etc. A translation of the Latin verses composed by Mary just before her execution.

O Domine Deus, speravi in te! O care mi Jesu, nunc libera me! In dura catena, in misera poena, Languendo, gemendo, et genu flectendo, Adoro, imploro ut liberes me.

213, 17. the earl marshal. The Earl of Shrewsbury.
221, 205. that the king of Spain, etc. The author of

Index of Persons'

Abington. Edward Abington (or Habington, 1553?-1586) was one of the conspirators with Babington. He vehemently maintained his innocence, but was executed with the others.

Allen. William Allen (1532-1594) was a Catholic theologian who left England in 1565, and established a college for English students, first at Douay, then at Rheims. In 1584 he entered upon a course of political intrigue directed against Elizabeth and English Protestantism, and advocated the claims of Philip II to the English throne. He was made a cardinal in August, 1587. The attribution to him of that title in Mary Stuart is thus inaccurate.

Arden. Francis Arden had been in the Tower for over two years when mentioned in the play, and was under sentence of death.

He remained in prison until his escape in 1597.

Arundel. Philip Howard, first Earl of Arundel (1557–1595), was converted to Catholicism in 1584, and intrigued against Elizabeth. He was sent to the Tower in 1585, and remained a prisoner until his death.

Aston. Sir Walter Aston (d. 1589) was the owner of Tixall, an estate near Chartley.

Aubespine. See Châteauneuf.

Aumale. Charles de Lorraine, Duc d'Aumale (1556-1631), was an adherent of the League in the French religious wars, and leader of the party after the murder, in 1588, of Henry I, third Duke of Guise. When Sir William Waad was sent to Paris in 1585 to demand the surrender of Morgan, he was waylaid by Aumale near Amiens and given a severe beating.

I The biographical material of this Index is based chiefly upon the Dictionary of National Biography, edited by Leslie Stephen and Sidney Lee. Only such facts are presented as seem necessary for an intelligent reading of the drama.

Babington. Anthony Babington (1561-1586) was a page in the household of Mary Stuart during her imprisonment at Sheffield, and afterwards leader of the Catholic conspiracy in her behalf. He was executed with six of his companions, September 20, 1585.

Ballard. John Ballard (d. 1586) was the chief instigator of the Babington conspiracy. He was a Jesuit priest, and visited England disguised as a soldier under the name of Captain Fortescue.

He was the first of the conspirators to be executed September 20. Barnes. Thomas Barnes was an agent of Phillipps in betraying the correspondence conducted by Mary from Chartley.

Barnwell. Robert Barnwell was one of the conspirators with Babington. The Dictionary of National Biography gives no account of him except in this connection.

Beale. Robert Beale (1541-1601) was a diplomatist and antiquary, who was sent on numerous missions to Mary, and who accompanied Lord Buckhurst when he informed her of the death-sentence. He had the duty of reading the warrant aloud at Fotheringay just before the execution, of which he has left an account.

Beaton. Mary Beaton is the only character in the tragedy presented in a mainly fictitious light. The real Mary Beaton was, however, one of the "four Maries" who attended the Queen in her earlier years. She married Alexander Ogilvie while the Queen was still in Scotland.

Beaton. See Glasgow.

Belleau. Rémy Belleau (1528-1577) was a French poet, and a member of the Pléiade.

Bellièvre. Pomponne de Bellièvre (1529–1607) was sent by the French court to Elizabeth in 1586 to demand Mary's pardon Bourgoin. Dominique Bourgoin was Mary's physician, and one of the attendants chosen to accompany her to the scaffold.

Bromley. Sir Thomas Bromley (1530-1587) became Lord Chancellor in 1579, and was active in the prosecution of the Babington conspirators and of Mary. The strain of her trial and execution proved too much for his strength, and he died a few weeks afterward.

Buckhurst. Thomas Sackville, first Earl of Dorset and Baron Buckhurst (1536-1608), was the poet of A Myrrowre for Magistrates and Gorboduc. He was one of the commissioners for the trial of Mary, but took no part in the proceedings. He was sent to Fotheringay in December, 1586, to announce to Mary the sentence of death.

Burghley. William Cecil, Lord Burghley (1520-1598), was Secretary of State under Elizabeth, and foremost minister of the Crown.

Carey. See Hunsdon. Cecil. See Burghley.

Chastelard. Pierre Boscobel de Chastelard (1540-1563) was a French poet who came to Scotland in Mary's train in 1561. Discovered one night hiding in her bed-chamber (his second offence of this sort), he was seized, sentenced, and hanged the next morning, February 22, 1563.

Chateauneuf. Guillaume de l'Aubespine, Marquis de Châteauneuf (1547-1629), was sent in August, 1585, to replace Mauvissière as French ambassador to Elizabeth.

Curle. Elspeth Curle was a sister of Gilbert Curle, and one of Mary's attendants on the scaffold.

Curle. Gilbert Curle was Nau's subordinate as secretary to Mary. Her attendant, Barbara Mowbray, became his wife.

Davison. William Davison (1541?-1608) was secretary of Elizabeth, and assistant to Walsingham. He was named on the commission for the trial of Mary, but took no part in the proceedings. He presented the warrant for Mary's execution to Elizabeth, who signed it, but asked Davison to hint to Mary's keepers that they might privately rid her of her troublesome prisoner. He wrote a letter to that effect, but Paulet and Drury indignantly repudiated the suggestion. After the execution of Mary, he was made a scapegoat by Elizabeth, who charged him with having exceeded his instructions, and he was imprisoned in the Tower for two years.

Didier. Didier Sifflard was an aged servant of Mary, a butler, mentioned in her will, and one of those chosen to accompany her to the scaffold.

Donne. Henry Donn was one of the conspirators tried and executed with Babington.

Drury. Sir Drue Drury (1531?-1617) was a gentleman-usher at Elizabeth's court. In November, 1586, he was sent to Fotheringay to assist Paulet in the wardership of Mary.

Dudley. See Leicester.

Egerton. Sir Thomas Egerton, Baron Ellesmere and Viscount Brackley (1540?-1617), was Solicitor-General at the time of Mary's trial.

Elizabeth. Elizabeth, Queen of England and Ireland (1533–1603), was the daughter of Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn. She came to the throne in 1558. Her attitude toward Mary was determined by the fact that the latter laid claim to the throne, and had the support of the Catholic party at home and abroad. Several attempts upon her life were made in the interest of Mary, who connived at, if she did not instigate them. This is the ample justification of Mary's trial and execution.

Ellesmere. See Egerton.

Farnese. Alessandro Farnese, Prince of Parma (1546-1592), was an Italian soldier in the service of Philip II, and one of the foremost generals of his age. He succeeded his uncle, Don John of Austria, as governor of the Spanish Netherlands.

Fernihurst. Andrew Ker of Ferniehurst was a son-in-law of Sir William Kirkcaldy of Grange, and was by him appointed provost of Edinburgh at the time when that city was being held for Mary against the assault of the English and Scotch partisans of her son.

Fletcher. Richard Fletcher (d. 1596) was Dean of Peterborough, and afterwards Bishop of London. He officiated as chaplain at the execution of Mary. He was the father of John Fletcher, the dramatist.

Gage. Robert Gage was one of the conspirators tried and executed with Babington.

Gawdy. Sir Francis Gawdy (d. 1606) was Queen's Sergeant, and in that capacity opened the case against Mary on the occasion of her trial.

Gervais. Jacques Gervais was Mary's surgeon, and accompanied her to the scaffold.

Gifford. Gilbert Gifford (1561?-1590) was an unscrupulous scoundrel who acted as a spy in the service of Walsingham. Being a Catholic, and in orders, he gained the confidence of Mary's friends, and betrayed their plans to the government. He encouraged the Babington conspirators, and delivered Mary's letters to his master. He died in prison. "That he was capable of almost any villainy is clear." Sidney Lee.

Gifford. William Gifford (1554-1629) was a lecturer at the English College at Rheims, and afterwards Archbishop and Duke of Rheims, and the first peer of France. There is nothing to indicate that he was related to the spy Gilbert Gifford.

Glasgow. James Beaton (or Bethune), Archbishop of Glasgow (1517-1603), was Mary's representative at the French court for many years, and administered her revenues as dowager of France.

Gorges. Sir Thomas Gorges was a gentleman of Elizabeth's court, sent with Wade to seize Mary's papers at Chartley.

Gorion. Pierre Gorion was Mary's apothecary, and chosen to accompany her to the scaffold. In October, 1587, he returned to Paris, and fulfilled the injunctions laid upon him by reporting to Mendoza. It may be added that the King of Spain scrupulously complied with Mary's requests.

Grange. Sir William Kirkcaldy of Grange (d. 1573) was one of Mary's enemies in Scotland, but was later restored to her favor. After the assassination of Murray, he held the castle of Edinburgh for the Queen's party, but was forced to surrender it to the combined forces of James VI and Elizabeth, whereupon he was hanged.

Gray. Patrick Gray, sixth Lord Gray (d. 1612), known as the "Master of Gray," was commissioned by Mary to represent her interests at the court of her son James, but betrayed her secrets to him, and plotted against her.

Grey. See Kent.

Car

Guise. Francis, second Duke of Guise (1519-1563), was Mary's uncle, and one of the greatest of French generals. He held Metz against Charles V, took Calais from the English, and brought about the treaty of Cateau-Cambrésis. He was assassinated by a Huguenot nobleman, February 18, 1563.

Guise. Henry I, third Duke of Guise (1550-1588), was a first cousin of Mary. He was the head of the League, and one of the contrivers of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, August 24, 1572. He was assassinated December 23, 1588.

Guise. See Lorraine.

Hardwick. See Shrewsbury. Hastings. See Huntingdon.

Hatton. Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor of England (1540-1591), was a favorite of Elizabeth, and took a prominent part in the trials of Parry, Babington, and Mary.

Howard. Charles Howard, Lord Howard of Effingham, Earl of Nottingham (1536-1624), was a distinguished courtier and Lord High Admiral. He was appointed a commissioner for Mary's trial, but was not present. According to Davison, it was at Howard's urgent request that Elizabeth signed the death-warrant.

Howard. See Arundel. Howard. See Norfolk.

Hunsdon. Henry Carey, first Lord Hunsdon (1524?-1596); was cousin to Elizabeth and chamberlain of her household, also the occupant of many responsible positions. He was one of the commissioners for the trial of Mary at Fotheringay.

Huntingdon. Henry Hastings, third Earl of Huntingdon (1535-1595), was for a short time joint custodian (with Shrewsbury) of Mary at Tutbury. He was a zealous Puritan, and a claimant to the throne of England.

James. Son of Mary and Darnley (1566-1625), became James VI of Scotland in 1567 (with Murray as regent), and James I of England after the death of Elizabeth in 1603.

John. Don John of Austria (1547–1578) was an illegitimate son of the Emperor Charles V, and celebrated for his victory over the Turks at Lepanto (1571). He was governor of the Netherlands from 1576 to his death. A marriage with Mary was planned for him, to take place after the conquest of England by Philip II of Spain.

Kennedy. Jane Kennedy was one of the attendants who accompanied Mary to the scaffold. She afterwards married Sir Andrew Melville.

Kent. Henry Grey, sixth Earl of Kent (d. 1615), was given charge of Mary's execution, in company with the Earl of Shrewsbury.

Ker. See Fernihurst.

Kirkcaldy. See Grange.

Knowles. Sir Francis Knollys (1514?-1596) was put in charge of Mary upon her arrival in England, and taught her the English language, trying at the same time to convert her. He acted as a commissioner at the trials of the Babington conspirators and of Mary.

Leicester. Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester (1532?-1588), was Elizabeth's favorite courtier, whom early in her reign she thought of marrying. About 1563, she suggested him as a possible husband for Mary. He became one of Mary's most determined enemies, and urged upon Elizabeth that she be privately murdered.

Leslie. See Ross.

Lewis. See Lodovic.

Liggons. Ralph Liggons was Mary's agent in Flanders, where he had lived in exile for several years.

Lodovic. Presumably Owen Lewis (1532-1594), a Welsh Catholic, who was Bishop of Cassano (Naples) and held other ecclesiastic offices abroad. He was a friend of Cardinal Allen from their boyhood days, and joint founder with him of the English seminaries at Douay and Rome.

Lopez. Roderigo Lopez was a Portuguese Jew, a physician, who settled in England in 1559, and was implicated in a plot to murder Elizabeth. He was executed in 1594. The allusion in the text is consequently an anachronism.

Lorraine. Charles, Cardinal of Lorraine (1525-1574), was the brother of Francis, Duke of Guise, and Mary's uncle.

Madge. Margaret of Valois, sister of Charles IX, and wife of Henry IV.

Mary Stuart. Mary Queen of Scots (1542-1587) was born in Linlithgow Palace, December 7 or 8, 1542. She was the daughter of James V of Scotland and Mary of Guise. She became an infant queen December 14, 1542, on the death of her father. On July 7, 1548, an arrangement was made for her marriage to the French dauphin, and she was at once sent to France for her education. She was married April 24, 1558. When Mary Tudor died in November of that year, Mary Stuart claimed the crown, and assumed the title of Queen of England, Scotland, and Ireland. On July 10, 1559, her husband became Francis II, King of France. He died December 5, 1560, and she returned to Scotland August 19, 1561. She married Henry Stewart, Lord Darnley, July 29, 1565. It was her intention to restore Catholicism in Scotland, and, with this in view, she gave high office to one David Rizzio, an Italian. Darnley's jealousy was aroused, and he, with a company of angry nobles, dragged Rizzio from her supper-room March 9, 1566, and murdered him. Pretending a reconciliation with Darnley, she escaped with him that night, and fled to Dunbar. She soon raised a powerful force, and entered Edinburgh. Meanwhile, the rebel lords escaped to England. Her son (James VI of Scotland and James I of England) was born June 19, 1566. Becoming hopelessly estranged from Darnley, she took James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, more and more into her favor, and plotted with him for the murder of her husband. Darnley, who was ill, was taken to a house in Kirk of Field, near Edinburgh, and was slain there by an explosion of gunpowder, February 9, 1567. Bothwell was charged with the crime, and, after a farcical trial, was acquitted April 12. He was divorced from his wife Catherine Gordon on May 3, and on May 15 became Mary's third husband. The opposing nobles made war upon him, and at Carberry Hill, June 15, Mary surrendered, on condition that Bothwell should be allowed to escape unmolested. Bothwell fled into exile, and Mary was sent to Lochleven. While there she abdicated, and signed an act nominating her half-brother Murray as regent for her infant son. She escaped from Lochleven May 2, 1568, gathered a force about her, and was finally defeated at Langside, May 13. She then crossed the Solway into England, appealing to Elizabeth for protection. Then followed her detention at Carlisle, Bolton, Tutbury, Wingfield, Tutbury, Coventry, Chatsworth, Sheffield (1570-83), Wingfield, Tutbury, Chartley, and Fotheringay. During these years occurred the Northumberland-Westmoreland plan for a Catholic rising (1569), the Ridolfi conspiracy (1572), the plot for an invasion under the Duke of Guise (1582), and the Babington conspiracy (1586). Mary was also engaged during these years in much active conspiracy with the Catholic enemies of Elizabeth in France, Spain, and Italy. She was tried October 14-15, at Fotheringay, for complicity in the Babington plot. The trial was before a commission of English nobles, and Mary conducted her own defence. After the second day, Elizabeth adjourned the trial to the star-chamber. Here on October 25, with but one dissenting vote, Mary was found guilty by the commissioners. About three weeks later, Buckhurst and Beale brought the verdict to her. The sentence was proclaimed and welcomed throughout England, but Elizabeth did not sign the death-warrant until February 1, 1587. At the same time she sent word to Paulet, Mary's keeper, indicating her displeasure that he should not, in all this time, have found some secret way of doing away with his prisoner. On February 7, Shrewsbury and Kent came to Fotheringay to superintend the execution of the sentence, and on the following morning she was beheaded in the great hall of the castle. She met her death with courage and dignity, solemnly avowing her innocence, and praying for her church and her enemies. Elizabeth pretended that she had never meant the execution to take place, vented her displeasure upon those immediately responsible for it, and gave her victim a royal burial, August I, in Peterborough Cathedral. The remains were afterwards transferred by James I to Westminster Abbev.

Melville. Sir Andrew Melville was master of the household of Mary during her latter years, and brother of Robert, first Lord Melville. He accompanied his mistress to the scaffold. He afterwards married Jane Kennedy.

Melville. Sir Robert Melville, first Lord Melville, was employed by Mary in diplomatic negotiations with Elizabeth. After the sentence, he was sent by James VI with the Master of Gray to entreat Elizabeth to spare Mary's life. Mendoza. Don Bernardino de Mendoza was Spanish ambassador to the English court, and was charged with complicity in the Throckmorton conspiracy. In consequence of this he was expelled from the country in January, 1584.

Mildmay. Sir Walter Mildmay (1520?-1589) was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and founder of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. He was one of the commissioners at Mary's trial.

Morgan. Thomas Morgan (1543-1606?) was a Catholic conspirator devoted to the cause of Mary. He was with her in Lord Shrewsbury's castle at Tutbury, where he managed her correspondence. In 1573 he went to Paris, and became her confidential agent abroad. He was implicated in Parry's plot to assassinate Elizabeth, and his surrender was demanded from the French king. This was not granted, but he was imprisoned in the Bastille, where he continued his activities as agent and conspirator. He helped to organize the Babington conspiracy.

Mowbray. Barbara Mowbray was one of Mary's attendants. She married Gilbert Curle, the secretary, and their child was baptized by Mary with her own name.

Murray. Lord James Stewart, Earl of Moray (1531?—1570) was Mary's half-brother and regent of Scotland. He was assassinated by James Hamilton.

Nau. Claude de la Boisselière Nau (fl. 1574-1605) was Mary's French secretary from 1575.

Neville. See Westmoreland.

Norfolk. Thomas Howard, fourth Duke of Norfolk (1536-1572), was a son of the poet Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey. He was the first subject in England under Elizabeth, and sought to become the fourth husband of Mary Stuart. Conspiring for her liberation, he was executed as a traitor.

Northumberland. Henry Percy, ninth Earl of Northumberland (1564-1632), whose father had died (probably by suicide) in the Tower the year before the date of this mention of the son, was a Protestant, but his intimacy in Paris with Charles Paget placed him under suspicion of being an adherent of Mary's cause.

Northumberland. Thomas Percy, seventh Earl of Northumberland, was beheaded at York, August 22, 1572, for conspiracy against Elizabeth.

Nottingham. See Howard.

Paget. Charles Paget (d. 1612) was a younger brother of Thomas Paget. He left England about 1572, and settled in Paris, where for many years he intrigued in Mary's cause, and shared in the administration of her immense dowry in France. He was attainted in 1587.

Paget. Thomas, third Lord Paget (d. 1590), fled to Paris after the discovery of Throckmorton's conspiracy in 1583. Elizabeth demanded his surrender by the French king, but was refused.

He was attainted in 1587, and died in exile.

Parma. See Farnese.

Parry. William Parry (d. 1585) was a Catholic conspirator, implicated with Morgan and Charles Paget in a plot to murder Elizabeth. Elected to Parliament in 1584, he was expelled a few months later, charged with high treason, convicted, and executed March 2, 1584-85.

Parsons. Robert Parsons (1546-1610) was an English Jesuit, active in intrigue against Elizabeth and the Protestants in England.

Paulet. Sir Amias Paulet (1536?-1588) was the keeper of Mary during her last year. He fulfilled his difficult duties in a strictly conscientious manner, and sternly refused to act upon the suggestion, sent him by Davison, that the secret murder of his prisoner would spare Elizabeth much embarrassment.

Percy. See Northumberland.

Philip. Philip II, King of Spain (1527-1598), was the only son of the Emperor Charles V. In 1554 he married Mary Tudor, Queen of England, and after her death attempted to obtain the hand of Elizabeth.

Phillipps. Thomas Phillipps was the secretary and spy of Walsingham who intercepted and deciphered Mary's correspondence.

He is known to have lived until 1622, or later.

Pierpoint. Elizabeth Pierpoint was a daughter of Sir Henry Pierpoint, who married Frances Cavendish, one of the children of the Countess of Shrewsbury by her second husband.

The Pope. Gregory XIII (1572-1585), Sixtus V (1585-1590).

Popham. Sir John Popham (1531?-1607) was Attorney-General at the time of Mary's trial.

Ronsard. Pierre de Ronsard (1524-1585), "prince of poets," was the chief of the Pléiade.

Ross. John Leslie, Bishop of Ross (1527-1596), was intimately associated with Mary's affairs from the time of her arrival in Scotland. He was one of her most trusted counsellors, and was concerned in many intrigues on her behalf. From 1574 he represented her interests in Paris and Rome. He was a voluminous writer of historical and political controversy, and the chief literary champion of the Catholic party in Scotland.

Sackville. See Buckhurst.

Salisbury. Thomas Salisbury (1555?—1586) was one of the conspirators with Babington. He pleaded guilty to the charge of inciting rebellion and foreign invasion, but denied that he had plotted the assassination of Elizabeth. He was executed September 21, the day after Babington and his six associates; this accounts for the fact that he does not appear in Act 11, Scene 3, of the tragedy.

Savage. John Savage (d. 1586) was a Catholic soldier. He met Ballard in London in 1586, and volunteered to join the Babington conspiracy. When brought to trial, he confessed to the whole indictment.

Shrewsbury. Elizabeth Talbot, Countess of Shrewsbury (1518-1608), known as "Bess of Hardwick," took the sixth Earl of Shrewsbury for her fourth husband in 1568. She was famous as a builder and as a woman of affairs.

Shrewsbury. George Talbot, sixth Earl of Shrewsbury (1528?-1590), was in charge of Mary from 1569 to 1584. He presided at her execution.

Stuart. See Murray.

Talbot. Mary Cavendish was a daughter of the Countess of Shrewsbury, and wife of Gilbert Talbot, son of the Earl of Shrewsbury by a former marriage. Talbot. See Shrewsbury.

Throgmorton. Thomas Throckmorton (d. 1595), a brother of the conspirator Francis Throckmorton (executed 1584), settled in Paris as one of Mary's agents in 1582.

Tichborne. Chidiock Tichborne (1558?-1586) was one of the conspirators with Babington. The letter which he wrote to his wife on the eve of his execution is preserved, as well as a poem of three stanzas which he is said to have written in the Tower.

Tilney. Charles Tilney (1561-1586) was one of the conspirators with Babington. He has been mentioned as possibly the author of The Tragedy of Locrine, on the strength of a manuscript note to that effect by George Buc, found by Collier in a copy of the 1595 edition of the play.

Wade. Sir William Wade (or Waad) (1546-1623) was a diplomatist who was sent to Mary to propose terms with Elizabeth, who went to Paris to secure Morgan's extradition, and who seized Mary's papers at Chartley.

Walsingham. Sir Francis Walsingham (1536?-1590) was Secretary of State under Elizabeth, and employed upon various foreign missions. He was one of the commissioners on the trial of Mary, and was accused by her partisans of having forged the letters to Babington offered as evidence of her guilt.

Westmoreland. Charles Neville, sixth Earl of Westmoreland (1543-1601), joined the Earl of Northumberland in rebellion against Elizabeth (1569), and escaped into the Spanish Netherlands, where he lived in exile the rest of his life.

Wyatt. Sir Thomas Wyatt the younger (1521?-1554) was a son of the poet, and leader of an insurrection against Mary Tudor in 1554. For this enterprise, undertaken in opposition to her marriage with Philip II, he was executed for high treason.
